

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PUBLISHERS' NOTE

LIPPINCOTT'S PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER in its various editions has been before the public just half a century, the first edition having made its appearance in 1855. The present publication, printed from new type from cover to cover, is a new work, embodying little more than the framework of its predecessor, together with its system of pronunciation. It presents a picture of the world in its minutest details in the year 1905.

In order to include the 1910 statistics of population in the counties, cities, and towns of the United States, a conspectus of the Thirteenth Census has been added.

PREFACE

IN no department of literary activity does the gradual process of evolution assert itself more forcibly than in that of encyclopædia-making. Intent upon the contemplation of what others in the same sphere have wrought, the compiler is almost irresistibly drawn towards modelling his work more or less closely upon what has gone before. Not the least important part of the preparation of an encyclopædist for his task is, therefore, to train himself to combat the tendency of regarding as indispensable, desirable, or useful that which his predecessors have so regarded,—to habituate himself to such self-restraint in the selection of the material that is to enter into his work as will enable him to proceed without being encumbered by a weight of dead matter which inertia makes it difficult to discard. He can hardly hope to emancipate himself altogether from the artificial standards which appear to have been thrust upon him, but the extent to which he succeeds in doing so will largely determine the excellence of his work.

In the preparation of LIPPINCOTT'S NEW GAZETTEER the Editors have labored zealously in the direction of the goal here indicated,—the construction of a dictionary of universal geography replete with useful information. They are aware that their publication will not escape criticism on the score of proportion. Frequently, however, when there appears to be a glaring want of harmony, careful comparison will show that the apparent blemish is in accord with the deliberate plan of the work. Take, for example, the brief paragraphs under the caption "History" with which the articles on countries terminate. The information conveyed in these sections is intended to be largely in the nature of statements referring to territorial changes, as matter pragmatic to the character of an encyclopædia of geography. For this reason a seemingly disproportionate amount of space will be found accorded, for example, to such a country as Saxony, as compared with more important states. Here the territorial changes have been of a nature to call for detailed statement, the name Saxony now designating a very different region from that which was the home of the Saxon invaders of Britain. In like manner the vicissitudes of foreign domination in southern Italy and Sicily have demanded extended treatment in the article on the Two Sicilies. The amount of space devoted to individual cities will frequently be found to be in inverse ratio to their size. The city of Lodz, the Manchester of Poland, with its population exceeding 300,000, can be disposed of in fewer words than quaint little Rothenburg, in Franconia, with its 8000 inhabitants. The great manufacturing town of Roubaix, with its hum and bustle, calls for much briefer treatment than modest Avignon, only one-third as large, living on the memories of its past.

It is needless to say that for the United States a standard of inclusion has been adopted entirely different from that employed in the case of foreign countries. Almost every cluster of houses that in this country deserves the name of hamlet is supposed to figure in the pages of the GAZETTEER. The Philippine Islands and other possessions of the United States beyond the seas are dealt with under a vast number of heads. For Canada the standard of inclusion has been made almost the same as that for the United States. As regards Cuba, Mexico, the South American republics, and the South African colonies, this work, in its full treatment, is intended to fill a gap in geographical literature.

The Editors have made every effort to incorporate into their work the latest results of exploration. The extraordinary activity that has marked this field of geographical inquiry during the past few years has done much to reconstruct the map of the globe, and the harvest of new facts now makes possible for the first time a nearly complete picture of our planet. The views that for generations were held regarding many parts of the earth's surface have given way to entirely new conceptions, and the gaps that have marked terra incognita have been effaced from the maps. The Tibet of the British Expedition of 1904 is very different from the picture of that region which the mind had constructed from the accounts—accurate though these have proved to be—which were furnished by French missionaries a half-century ago; the Sahara of Foureaux and Lamy is no longer that which has served as a text for the geologist almost to the present day. No period in the annals of Polar exploration has been so prolific in results as the ten years which close with the year 1905, marking the course of some of the most brilliant achievements recorded in the annals of geographical discovery. The work of Nansen and the Duke of the Abruzzi, which has extended our knowledge of the globe on one side to within about two hundred and fifty miles of the Pole; of Scott, who surmounted the seemingly insuperable Antarctic barrier of Ross, and who has brought observation to within five hundred miles of the opposite Pole of the earth; of Peary, who, in the United States Coast, has extended the boundaries of the known land-masses of the globe to lat. 83° 39' N.; of Jackson, Drygalski, Gerlache, Borchgrevink, and others, closely preceded by the researches of Larsen and Christensen,—all these conquests reflect the remarkable revival of research in a field which by many had been thought to be virtually closed. This same period of ten years has witnessed some of the most interesting and important processes of colonization which history records, all of which have left a profound impress upon world-geography and the shaping of its map. As largely subversive of the old-time doctrine that geographical influence is paramount in determining man's sphere of activity on the globe, one need merely point to the great northerly migration of 1897–98 initiated by the discovery of gold in the Klondike region; to the construction of the Transiberian railway; to the establishment or extension of steamboat navigation on the great lakes of central Africa; and to the survey and construction in great part of the Cape-to-Cairo railway.

The destructive and constructive processes which nature and man have applied to the modification of the earth's surface have wrought more than insignificant changes even in the short period of time that has here been considered. The observer notes with interest the disappearance of landmarks that have stood as seemingly ineffaceable characters in the countries to which they belonged. Thus, the historiographer points to the conversion of the Boeotian Lake Copais (Topolias) into arable land; the geographer, to the annihilation through irrigation channels of the once famous Lake Tulare, in California; to the desiccation, in southern Africa, of Lake Ngami, the discovery of which in 1849 was the opening episode in Livingstone's career as an explorer; to the transformation of the basin of Lake Fucino (Celano), in the Apennines, into smiling fields of grain. The catastrophic awakening of Mont Pelée in the early part of the year 1902 has left only past history to a modern city of twenty-five thousand inhabitants, while contributing in its phenomena one of the most remarkable chapters to the study of terrestrial physics. The shifting of desert sands has uncovered sites of former active life in the Central Asiatic wastes of the Kashgar-Darya, in the Sahara, and elsewhere, adding to the historic problems which had already been furnished by the uncovering of Nippur, in Babylonia, and of Tingad and Lambèse (Lambessa), in Algeria.

Not the least interesting results of recent geographical research have been gathered from the domain of mountain exploration. The pursuit of the glories of the universe as seen from a mountain top—a joy which Petrarch was seemingly the first to recognize—has opened up new and broad fields of recreation to the tourist, while adding a wealth of new knowledge regarding those more salient features of the earth's surface which have at all times attracted the attention of man. The mountains of western Canada, which were practically unknown except as forbidding buttresses ten years ago, have recently risen into prominence as an alpinistic field, and their lofty ice-bound summits (Assiniboin, Lefroy, Goodsir, Temple) to-day attract the pick and the axe of the alpinist who but a short time ago was satisfied only with a Weisshorn or a Matterhorn. Alaska has during this period seen the development of Mount McKinley—hitherto obscurely designated on Russian or Americanized Russian maps by the name of Bolshaya, "great mountain"—into the culminating point of the North American continent, vieing with the giants of the South American Andes—Aconcagua, Tupungato, Illimani, Sorata—which have latterly challenged the daring of Zurbriggen, Fitzgerald, Vines, and Conway, or with the Himalayan summits so intrepidly scaled by Mr. and Mrs. Workman. The geographer cannot well leave the field of mountain exploration without adverting to the steady conquest of points of view by mountain railway,—a field of engineering activity which, inaugurated in the United States on the slopes of Mount Washington, in the White Mountains, has been specially developed in Switzerland. To attain the summit of the Jungfrau by rail was hardly more than a dream ten years ago; to-day the project is largely in process of realization.

No survey of the field would be adequate without a reference to the changes that have taken place during recent years in the sources of the mineral supply of the world. The auriferous fields of the Transvaal Colony have developed into the richest on the face of the globe. Colorado has outstripped California in the yield of gold and has become the foremost silver-producing state in the Union. Montana now boasts of the richest deposits of copper in the world, and Minnesota outranks Michigan in the output of iron. The product of the iron-mines of Germany has eclipsed that of the mines of Great Britain. Sweden has risen to a new level among iron-producing countries through the exploitation of the prodigious deposits at Gellivare, beyond the Arctic Circle. New Caledonia has found a rival in the district of Sudbury, Ontario, as a leading source of the world's supply of nickel. Immense stores of petroleum have been discovered in California, Texas, Kansas, and adjacent regions, vying with those of the Appalachian fields and the Ohio valley. In the yield of this mineral Baku, on the shores of the Caspian Sea, has risen to the foremost position in the world. Prussia almost equals England in the products of its coal-mines.

No pains have been spared to secure accuracy in every department of the GAZETTEER. A long and varied experience in the field of encyclopædia-making on the part of the Editors has taught them the necessity of constantly guarding against pitfalls of every kind and the danger of accepting statements too readily even when based upon the concurrence of several authorities. Frequently the best efforts of editors and compilers in this direction fail to achieve their end through the fault of the press. In the case of LIPPINCOTT'S NEW GAZETTEER the work of a large corps of expert proof-readers has guaranteed the appearance of the printed text in the exact form in which the manuscript left the hands of the Editors.

The Editors are conscious that, in spite of all efforts to secure accuracy, errors of statement have crept in. They believe, however, that such lapses will not be found important, and that they have been reduced to the minimum that could be hoped for in the preparation of a work of the scope and magnitude of the NEW GAZETTEER. It has naturally been found impossible to record all the territorial changes and discoveries made during the process of preparing and printing the book,—e.g., the introduction since the official publication of the census reports of 1900 of some new counties (a number not yet fully organized) in a few of the western states and territories, as Colorado, New Mexico, North and South Dakota; the creation in September, 1905, of the new lieutenant-governorship of Eastern Bengal and Assam; or the readjustment of the Northwestern Territories of Canada by which two regions were constituted new provinces (Alberta and Saskatchewan) of the Dominion of Canada,—but the course of events has, in general, been followed as closely as could be to the moment of publication. Thus, the reader will find embodied in the work the final episode of the struggle between Russia and Japan in the Asiatic East.

The system of pronunciation adopted in this work is that prepared for the old LIPPINCOTT'S PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER by that eminent scholar, the late Joseph Thomas, the author of Lippincott's "Dictionary of Biography and Mythology." His rendering of the pronunciation of foreign names has been subjected to careful scrutiny, and many emendations have been made in the Russian, Hungarian, Rumanian, Italian, Spanish, and other departments. In the transliteration of Russian names it has been deemed preferable to use ts to express the sound represented by the English ch, in order to avoid the confusion that might result from the presence in the Polish and Czech (Bohemian) languages, which use the Roman characters, of ch with a phonetic value very different from that of the English ch. In like manner ts is employed in Turkish and other West Asiatic names.

In consulting encyclopædias and geographical works of reference the reader is frequently misled with regard to the population of the smaller towns of Europe. It is customary in stating the number of inhabitants to give the population of the commune,—that is, of the town together with a small adjacent district, corresponding in a general way to a township in the United States. Frequently a small place, little more than a village, is thus made to appear a considerable town. In Italy the commune has often several times as many inhabitants as its capital. In such cases two figures will be found in this GAZETTEER.

A few words need here be said regarding the placing of American towns. These have, in nearly all cases, unless the fact is otherwise stated, been located by railroad distances from other towns. The names of the railroads, as given, are in most cases those of the operating lines, the Editors following in this selection the official railroad guides of the country. In some instances minor localities have been placed on railroads when, in fact, they are removed from one to two miles from the actual lines; in nearly all such cases, however, a station bearing the name of the locality in question appears in the railway schedule.

KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION

â as a in face.
ä as a in far.
à as a in fall.
â as a in fat.
ə, obscure a, as in organ, oval.
ai (in the combination air) as a in bare.
e as e in deny or as i in pin.
ê as e in met.
ë or eh, obscure e, as in berth, rasel.
ëë as i in pin.
i as i in pine.
i or î as i in pin.
ï, obscure i, as in firm, evil.
ô (or simple o when ending a syllable) as o in no.
ö or õ as o in not.
o, obscure o, as in sermon, harbor.
u (or ü, ending a syllable) as u in tube.
ü as u in tub, fur.
th as th in this.
TH (small capitals) as th in this.
ö as ö in German, a sound approximately represented by u in bad.
ü like the French u and the German ü. This sound has no equivalent in English. It may be produced by trying to enunciate the long sound of e (ee) through a small round opening of the projected lips. The French euir is pronounced nearly like queer; Swiss, like Swiss.
ñ (small capital), in the pronunciation of Spanish names, represents the sound of the English ñ verging towards that of w.
ɲ (small capital) indicates a sound very similar to ñ in this.
x and ç (small capitals) indicate the sound of the German ch, or one similar to it. This has no equivalent in English. It resembles the sound of the English h uttered with a strong aspiration. Its phonetic value is conveyed approximately by the sound of wh in the exclamation when!

ɣ (small capital) indicates a sound similar to the preceding, but with a strong guttural aspiration.
l (liquid) is to be pronounced like ll in million (mil'jən); it blends the sounds of l and y consonant.
ɲ is pronounced like ni in minion (mi'jən); it blends the sounds of n and y consonant.
ɲ and ɲ (small capitals) and ɲ indicate a nasal sound in French, Portuguese, and Polish (among European languages) which has no equivalent in English. It is approximately heard in pronouncing sang, sing, song, and sung in such a way as to sound the g but slightly.
ɲ (small capital) has the sound of rr in terror.
u (small capital) or uh indicates the sound of the French eu (German ö); the phonetic value is approximately the sound of u in bad, prolonged.
ʋ indicates a sound similar to the English v.
aw indicates the sound of a in fall.
öw indicates the sound of ow in now.
gh is the symbol used to express the hard sound of g (as in go) when that letter precedes e or i.

The terminal small y (as in es'y) placed after the accent in French names ending in il or ille indicates the consonant sound of the English y. To give a better idea of its value, we may add that according to this scheme ti'y would be equivalent to ti (the), aw'y to oi (as in boil).

The dj employed to indicate the sound of terminal gy in Hungarian names represents only an approximation to the real sound, which is that of d followed by consonant y.

Sometimes different modes are adopted to indicate the same sound, absolute uniformity not having been regarded as imperative in some cases where there would be advantage in departing from it.

When a name has a secondary accent in addition to the primary one, the syllable bearing it is marked thus (''); for example, Pae'samaquod'y.

PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD

A

Aa

Aa, ä (a contraction of the old German Ääa, and the same with Aach or Äch, signifying "flowing water"), an affluent of the Ems, which it joins at Münster.

Aa, a river of Livonia, flowing into the Gulf of Riga.

Aa, a river of Courland, flowing past Mitau and discharging into the Gulf of Riga.

Aa, a river of France, department of Nord, flowing into the North Sea near Gravelines.

Aa, a river of Switzerland, canton of Aargau, forms the lakes Baldegg and Hallwyl, and joins the Aar near Aarau.

Aa, or Sarner-Aa, sär-ner-ä, a river of Switzerland, canton of Unterwalden, traverses Lakes Lungern and Sarren and enters Lake Lucerne near Alpnach.

Aa, a river of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, passes Helmond and joins the Dommel at Bois-le-Duc.

Aa, or Grande-Aa, gränd-ä, a river of Belgium, in the province of Antwerp, a tributary of the Little Nethe.

Aabenraa, the Danish for ÄPENNRADE.

Aach, ä, a town of Baden, 15 miles NE. of Schaffhausen, on the river of the same name, which falls into Lake Constance. Pop. about 950.

Aachen, ä, kən, the German name of AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

Aadorf, ä, dörf, a commune of Switzerland, canton of Thurgau, 3 miles from Frauenfeld. Pop. about 1100.

Aaifjord, aw'fe-ond', a fjord, or bay, and town of Norway, stift of Trondhjem. The town is the seat of fisheries and of a large coastwise trade. Pop. about 4000.

Aakirkeby, aw-këen'këh-bü, a town of Denmark, island of Bornholm, near the S. coast, with a church of black marble, quarried in its vicinity. Pop. about 1000.

Aal, awl, a town of Norway, on the Ustedal, 120 miles NW. of Bergen. Pop. about 3500.

Aalborg, awl'bous (i.e., "Bel Castle;" L. Albur'gum), a city and seaport of Denmark, in Jutland, on the S. shore of the Lim-Fjord, near its mouth in the Cattegat. Lat. 57° 3' N.; lon. 9° 56' E. It is a bishop's see and has a nautical school and an old royal castle. Its fisheries and trade are important. Pop. in 1901, 31,462. The stift of Aalborg is one of the four ecclesiastical divisions of Jutland.

Aalbuch, äl'böök, a group of mountains of Germany, in the NE. part of the Alb or Swabian Alps, in Württemberg. It has no lofty summits, is largely covered with beech forests, and has two historic peaks,—the Hohenstaufen and the Hohenrechberg, each with its ruined castle.

Aalen, ä, len, a town of Württemberg, on the Kocher, 40 miles E. of Stuttgart. Pop. in 1900, 9033.

Aalesund, aw'leh-sound, or Alesund ("Bel Sound"), a seaport town of Norway, in the amt of Romsdal. Lat. 62° 24' N.; lon. 6° 5' E. It has extensive trade and fisheries. Pop. in 1898, 10,192.

Aalia Paakai, ä-ä-leä'ä pi-ä-kä'ee, a generic Hawaiian name for a series of salt lakes or marshes. Specifically, a lake on Oahu Island, in the crater of an immense tuff cone, about 4 miles from Honolulu and 1 mile from the ocean. The water in some respects closely resembles the water of the Dead Sea.

Aalsmeer, äls'mair, a village of the Netherlands, in North Holland, 8 miles SW. of Amsterdam. Pop. about 5900.

Aalst, a town of Belgium. See ALOOST.

Aalten, äl'ten, a village of the Netherlands, province of Gelderland, on the Aa, 29 miles E. of Arnhem. Pop. about 7000.

Aamodt, aw'mot, a town of Norway, on the Glommen, 86 miles NNE. of Christiania. Pop. about 3300.

Aarwangen

Aar, ä, or Aare, ä, räh (anc. Obris'ga), a river of Switzerland, rises in the Upper Aar glacier of the Schreckhorn, canton of Bern, forms the remarkable fall of Handeck, traverses the lakes of Briens and Thun, passes Thun, Bern, Soleure, and Aarau, and falls into the Rhine opposite Waldshut. It is navigable from the Rhine to Thun, and has been canalized between Meiringen and the lake of Briens.

Aar, the name of several glaciers, known as the Upper-, Lower-, Finster-, and Lauter-Aar glaciers, of the Finsteraarhorn and Schreckhorn group of mountains, in the canton of Bern, Switzerland. They have been made classical ground in geology through the researches of Agassiz and others. The Upper-Aar glacier gives source to the river Aar, and has a length of 4 miles.

Aarafat, a hill of Arabia. See ARAFAT.

Aarau, ä, röw, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Aargau, on the Aar, 41 miles NE. of Bern. Pop. in 1900, 7995. It has manufactures of silk, cotton, mathematical instruments, and railroad material, and noted bell and cannon foundries. The cantonal library contains nearly 100,000 volumes.

Aarberg, än'bërg, a town of Switzerland, on an island in the Aar, 12½ miles NW. of Bern. Pop. 1200.

Aarburg, or Arburg, än'böörg, a town of Switzerland, on the Aar, 6 miles by rail SW. of Aarau. Pop. 2000.

Aardenburg, än'den-bööne', a town of the Netherlands, province of Zeeland, 4 miles SE. of Sluis. Pop. 2000.

Aargau, än'göw (Fr. Argovie, an'go'vee'; L. Argovia), a canton of Switzerland, bounded by the cantons of Zürich, Zug, Lucerne, Bern, Soleure, and Basel, and by the Rhine, which separates it from Baden. Area, 542 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 206,498, more than one-half being Protestants. Surface undulating, and traversed by the Aar, Reuss, and Limmat. Soil well cultivated. Vineyards extensive. Principal manufactures, cottons, silks, straw hats, and tobacco. The warm sulphur waters of Baden and Schinznach are in this canton. The name, which is German, signifies the "district of the Aar." Capital, Aarau.

Aarhus, or Aarhuus, aw'r'hoose, a seaport of Denmark, in Jutland, on the Cattegat, at the mouth of the Molle-Aue, 37 miles SE. of Viborg. Lat. 56° 9' N.; lon. 10° 12' E. It has a cathedral, a library of 200,000 volumes, a museum, and various manufactures, and regular steam communication with England. Pop. in 1901, 51,909. It has been the seat of a bishop since the tenth century.

Aarlanderveen, än'län-der-vän', a town of the Netherlands, in the province of South Holland, 17 miles SSE. of Haarlem.

Aarle-Rixtel, än'leh-rix'tel, a village of the Netherlands, North Brabant, 3 miles S. of Helmond.

Aarmühle, än'mü'leh, a village of Switzerland, canton of Bern, adjoining Interlaken.

Aarö, aw'rö, a small island of Prussia, Schleswig, in the Little Belt, 10 miles E. of Hadersleben. Opposite it, on the E. coast of Schleswig, is the village of Aarsund.

Aaron, ä, rön, a post-hamlet of Jefferson co., Ga. Pop. about 50.

Aaron, a post-hamlet of Switzerland co., Ind., 43 miles WSW. of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Aaronsburg, ä, rönz-bürg, a post-village of Center co., Pa., about 20 miles E. of Bellefonte. Pop. about 400.

Aarwangen, än'väng-en, a town in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, 31 miles NE. of Bern, on the Aar. Pop. 1800.

Aarwood, a post-village of Kalkaska co., Mich., 14 miles NW. of Kalkaska.

Aas, as, a village of France, Basses-Pyrénées, 18 miles SE. of Oloron. It has mines of iron and lead. Pop. 400.

Aas, aws, a fortified town of Norway, with a good harbor, a few miles S. of Christiania. Pop. 2670.

Aastad, ah'stád, a post-hamlet of Otter Tail co., Minn., 6 miles NE. of Wendell.

Aasvår, aw'svair, a group of small low islands, on the Arctic Circle, 10 or 12 miles from the coast of Norway. Its herring-fisheries were formerly very important.

Aath, a town of Belgium. See ATH.

Abyssinia, ab-is-sin'e-ſſe (Arabic, Habesh, hā'bēsh'; Fr. Abyssinie, 1'bees'see'nē; Ger. Abessinien, 1'bee-see'nē-nē), a country of eastern Africa, bounded on the N. by Eritrea, on the E. by the Danakil country and Somali (a portion of which lies between it and the Gulf of Aden), on the SE. by Somali and the country of the Gallas, on the S. and W. by British East Africa, and on the NW. by eastern Sudan. Its limits on the SE. are not well defined, but it may be said to be mostly included between lat. 6° and 15° N., and between lon. 35° and 43° E., and is about 600 miles long and 500 miles wide. It was comprised in the ancient Ethiopia, and is now called Itiopia by the Abyssinians themselves. This region, rising somewhat gradually and in terrace form from the west, but descending most abruptly on the east to waterless plains which lie between it and the Red Sea, is a high table-land, with a wall-like escarpment on the E. (the so-called "border mountains"), on which groups of mountains rise to great elevations, some of them attaining an altitude of over 15,000 feet above the sea-level. The highest known peaks are those of the Samen or Semyen range, near the course of the Takasse, Ras Dashan and Abba-Yared being seemingly each over 15,000 feet high. There are a number of other summits of scarcely less elevation. The table-lands or plateaus are generally from 6000 to 9000 feet high, the site of Adowa, formerly a capital of Tigré, being 6400 feet above the sea. The mountains present rugged and fantastic forms, with sides frequently abrupt and precipitous. The dominant physiographic detail of the land is constituted by the vast basaltic outflows of the Tertiary period, which have built up plateau masses and given evidence of an intensity of volcanic action hardly equalled on the surface of the globe. This eruptive energy has now entirely subsided, and its reminiscence is to be found solely in the few cones which border the Red Sea and in thermal streams of the interior. The surface is diversified by fertile valleys and remarkable ravines, which are at some places nearly 4000 feet deep. Among the physical features is Lake Dembea or Tsana, which is near Gondar, and is about 50 miles long. The principal rivers—namely, the Bahr-el-Azrek or Blue Nile, the Atbara, and the Takasse, with their affluents—are tributaries of the Nile. Abyssinia has no navigable streams. Several of its rivers are lost in the sands, and never reach the sea. The Hawash traverses the SE. part, and enters Lake Aussa. The floods that rush down the Blue Nile and the Atbara in the rainy season contribute largely to the annual inundation of the Lower Nile in Egypt.

The climate of Abyssinia is generally salubrious and agreeable. The rainy season begins about the middle of June, and ends near the 30th of September. The great elevation of the surface and the copious summer rains render the temperature of Abyssinia lower than that of Nubia and Egypt. Three climatic zones are frequently recognized: 1, the Kwole, the lowlands up to an elevation of about 6000 feet, and supporting in part a luxuriant tropical vegetation; 2, the Woina-Dega, from 6000 feet to about 8500 feet, the centre of fruitful cultivation; and 3, the Dega, the highlands above 8500 feet, which are in many parts grassy or barren, or even steppe-like in character, with the temperature even in daytime frequently descending to the freezing point. The highest mountain-peaks are covered with perpetual snow, and some snow lingers even in the deep lower ravines. Among the wild animals are the elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, lion, hyena, leopard, buffalo, antelope, and monkey. The domestic animals are horses, cattle, sheep, goats, and mules. The cultivated cereals are maize, barley, wheat, millet, and teff (Poa abyssinica), a herbaceous plant with grains not larger than the head of a pin. Coffee grows wild, and sugar-cane and cotton are cultivated in favorable localities. The indigenous and cultivated fruits are the date, orange, peach, pomegranate, grape, banana, and lemon. Salt, which is obtained in the form of rock-salt, is used to some extent as currency. Gold, silver, and antimony are also found.

The Abyssinian realm comprises three main divisions, Amhara (with Gojam) in the centre and west, Shoa in the south, and Tigré (with Lasta) in the north, besides Kaffa and Enarea in the extreme S. and Harrar in the SE. In addition, Abyssinia claims a large territory to the NE. of British East Africa. The chief towns are Addis Abeba, in Shoa, Gondar, in Amhara, Adowa and Axum, in Tigré, and Ankober, in Shoa. The royal residence is Addis Alam. The people are mostly engaged in agriculture and pastoral pursuits and have made little progress in manufactures or civilization. The population of Abyssinia is made up of Hamitic, Semitic, and Negro elements. The Abyssinians are mostly of medium stature and well formed, with regular features, dark hair, and brown or swarthy complexion. They are ignorant and superstitious, barbarous and warlike. The ordinary speech of the upper classes and the official language is the Amharic, a Semitic tongue, allied to the Gees, or Ethiopic, the ancient language of Abyssinia, which still survives in the church and among scholars. Akin to the Amharic is the Tigré. Among the lower classes Agau (Agow), the Hamitic language of the tribe of that name, is largely spoken. The Gallas, a warlike tribe in the S., speak a Hamitic tongue. The prevailing religion of the country is a corrupt form of Christianity, which is professed by the reigning princes as well as by a majority of the people. The Christian religion was introduced here about A.D. 330, in the reign of Constantine. The Abyssinians are mono-physites, and recognise the Coptic patriarch of Alexandria as the head of their church. Their immediate ecclesiastical ruler bears the title of "Abuna" (our father), and is consecrated at Alexandria. He resides in Gondar. The Abyssinians practise circumcision, and regard the Virgin as the queen of heaven and the great intercessor for the sins of mankind. Their literature is composed almost exclusively of legends of saints and controversial works of theology. One of the Abyssinian tribes, the Falashas, profess Judaism. A railroad, opened for traffic in December, 1902, connects Addis-Harrar with the port of Jibuti.

In the year 1855 an Amharic chief of superior talents obtained the throne of Abyssinia and took the title of Theodore III., emperor (negus) of Itiopia. He gained several victories over the Gallas and other enemies, conquered Shoa, and took Ankober, the capital, maintaining an army of 100,000 to 150,000 men. In 1864, for some fancied insult on the part of the British government, he imprisoned the British consul and other British subjects. A British army, commanded by Sir Robert Napier, invaded Abyssinia in 1868. Theodore shut himself up in Magdala, which the British took by storm in April, 1868, and there found the dead body of the emperor, who had killed himself. He was succeeded by Prince Kassai, of Tigré, who was crowned as King Johannes, and after his death, in 1889, Menelek II., King of Shoa, became ruler. In the same year Abyssinia became practically an Italian protectorate, but the victory of Menelek at Adowa, in 1896, put an end to the Italian pretensions. Estimated area, 210,000 sq. m. Pop. 4,000,000.—Adj. and inhab. ABYSSINIAN, or, in their own language, ITIOPIYAN, or ITIOPIAVIAN.

Adrianople, ad're-an-d'p'l (Turk. Edirne; anc. Adrianopolis or Hadrianopolis), a city of European Turkey, capital of the vilayet of Adrianople, on the Maritza, where it is joined by the Tunja and the Arda, 137 miles NW. of Constantinople. Lat.  $41^{\circ} 41' 26'' N.$ ; lon.  $26^{\circ} 35' 41'' E.$  Pop. about 70,000 (formerly much greater), consisting of Turks (less than half), Bulgarians, Jews (Spanish), Armenians, and Greeks. It is on the railroad from Belgrade to Constantinople, and is a place of great commercial importance. The mosque of the Sultan Selim is a splendid structure, with four lofty minarets and a rich interior. It is considered the finest Moslem temple extant. The aqueduct which supplies the city is also a noble structure. Adrianople is the seat of a Greek archbishop and of a Bulgarian and an Armenian bishop. On the right bank of the Tunja, which is crossed by a fine stone bridge, is the Eski-Serai, the old palace of the sultans, now in a state of decay. One of the bazaars is a noteworthy structure. Adrianople possesses manufactories of silks, woollens, and linens, and has dye-works and tanneries. Adrianople was founded by the Emperor Hadrian and was the capital of the Ottoman empire from 1361 to 1453. Here was signed in 1829 a treaty between Russia and Turkey, in which the latter power recognized the independence of Greece.

Adrianople, a vilayet or province of European Turkey, bordering on the Black and Aegean Seas and the Sea of Marmora. Area, 15,015 sq. m. Capital, Adrianople. Pop. (excluding Constantinople, which has a separate governmental organization) estimated at about 1,000,000.

Adriatic, ad're-at'ic (anc. A'dria and Ma're Adria'ticum; It. Mare Adriatico, mǎ'rǎ d're-á'te-ko), an arm of the Mediterranean, extending from lat.  $40^{\circ}$  to  $45^{\circ} 46' N.$ , between Italy on the W. and Istria, Dalmatia, and Albania on the E. Length, 500 miles; mean breadth, 100 miles. It is named from the town of Adria. The name of Gulf of Venice is given to the NW. part. On the E. are the Gulfs of Trieste (Fiume, or Quarnero) and Cattaro, on the coast of Austria-Hungary, and of Drin, in Albania. On the W. is the Gulf of Manfredonia. The shores are generally low on the Venetian side, and are covered with unwholesome marshes. On the Dalmatian side the waves dash against enormous rocks and islands which environ the coast, affording to vessels a secure retreat from storms. During summer navigation is safe, but in winter the SE. winds cause much destruction. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance, except the Adige and the Po. Its depth, between Dalmatia and the mouths of the Po, is 22 fathoms; but a large part of the Gulf of Trieste, and of the Adriatic opposite Venice, is less than 12 fathoms deep. Farther to the S., where it is less affected by the influx of rivers, the gulf deepens, and attains a maximum depth of about 5200 feet (as between Bari and Durazzo). It has little perceptible tide, except at Venice, where there is a rise of a foot, and exceptionally during storm-winds, of 3-4 feet, and in the narrows at its entrance, where the ebb and flow is well marked. There can be little doubt that its depth was formerly much greater than it is now, as was also its extent, the former being affected by the deposits, which are rapidly accumulating at the bottom, and the latter by the alluvial tracts forming along its borders. The plains of Venetia represent an ancient portion or "bight" of the Adriatic, which has been filled in by sediments derived from the Alps. On the W. coast a series of lagoons, formed by long lines of sand-bars, are rapidly filling up and being converted into meadows by mud brought down by the streams. Between the N. point of the Gulf of Trieste down to the S. of Ravenna there is an uninterrupted series of accretions of land more than 100 miles in length, which within the last 2000 years have increased from 2 to 20 miles in breadth. The mean rate of advance of the delta of the Po on the Adriatic, between the years 1200 and 1600, was about 27 yards a year; the mean annual gain, from 1600 to 1804, was 76 yards, and at present it exceeds 200 feet. Ravenna, which in Strabo's time was used as a military port, is now removed 4 miles from the sea, and Adria, which was likewise a Roman port, is 14 miles inland. The Adriatic communicates with the arm of the Mediterranean known as the Ionian Sea by the Strait of Otranto.

Adro, à'dro, a town of Italy, province and 12 miles WNW. of Brescia. Pop. about 1800.

Adua, a town of Abyssinia. See ADWA.

Adula Mountains, a division of the Eastern Alps of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, lying off the San Bernardino road. Highest summit, the Rheinwaldhorn, 11,150 feet.

Egean (e-jee'an) Sea, or Græcian Archipel'ago, that part of the Mediterranean lying between Asia Minor on the E., Greece and part of Turkey on the W., and the latter country on the N. Its length, from N. to S., is about 400 miles; its greatest breadth about 175 miles; at Cape Doro, at the S. extremity of the island of Eubœa, it narrows to 90 miles, but afterwards widens to nearly its former width. Its depth is very great, there being, in many places, at less than a mile from the shore, no bottom to be found with a 200-fathom line. In many places there is a depth of 3000-4000 feet, and in the southern basin, N. of Cape Sidero, Crete, a depth of 7370 feet has been sounded. It contains numerous islands, many of which are of volcanic origin; others are composed entirely of pure white marble, their mountain elevations having an average height of from 1500-1800 feet. Among the better known of the Egean Islands are Eubœa, Chios (Scio), Lesbos, Lemnos, Andros, Naxos, Samos, and Skyros. Rhodes and Carpathos (Scarpanto) lie at the SE. entrance to the sea.

Aegeri, a lake of Switzerland, about 4 miles E. of the Lake of Zug. Elevation, 2380 feet. On it are the villages of Unter-Aegeri and Ober-Aegeri.

Egida, an ancient name of CAPO D'ISTRIA.

Egilia, the ancient name of CERIGOTTO.

Egina, ee-j'ing, an island of Greece, in the Gulf of Egina (Saron'icus S'ine), 16 miles S. by W. of Athens. Lat. of Mount St. Elias, in the S. part,  $37^{\circ} 41' 9''$  N.; lon.  $23^{\circ} 30'$  E. The island is 8 miles in length and about the same in breadth. It was an important state in antiquity (conquered by Athens in 456 B.C.), and was celebrated for the splendor of its buildings, among which was the temple of Jupiter, on Mount St. Elias. Pop. about 9000.

Egina, a town of Greece, on the island of Egina. For some time it was the residence of the Greek senate and governor. Pop. about 5000.

Egina, Gulf of (anc. Saron'icus S'ine), on the E. side of Greece, between Attica and Peloponnesus, is about 50 miles in length and 30 in breadth. It contains the islands of Salamis and Egina and several islets.

Affoltern, a village of Switzerland, canton of Zürich, 4 miles NNW. of Zürich. Pop. 2200.

Afghanistan, Af-gân-is'tân ("Afghan-land" or "Afghan-country"), an inland country of Asia, lying between lat. 29° 30' and 38° 35' N., and lon. 60° 50' and 74° 50' E., having on the N. the Turkoman territory (belonging to Russia) and Bokhara, on the NE. Darwas and other Pamir regions, on the E. Chitral, the British Indian district of Peshawur and Waziristan, on the S. Baluchistan, and on the W. Persia. Afghanistan comprises five main divisions: Kabul in the E., Kandahar in the S., Herat in the W., Afghan-Turkestan in the N., and Badakhshan (capital, Fainabad) in the NE. In Afghan-Turkestan are included Balkh, Kunduz, Andkhui, Maimana, Khulm, and other territories. Kafiristan, SE. of the Hindu-Kush, is now recognized by the British as belonging to Afghanistan. Kabul and Kandahar constitute Afghanistan proper. Area estimated at 240,000 sq. m., and the population at about 4,500,000. Most of the surface is of great elevation, rising in many of its plains to 4000-7000 feet above the sea. The land declines to the W. and to the NW., falling in the valley of the Amu-Darya to 1000 feet or lower. The principal mountain-mass or chain is that of the Hindu-Kush, which enters from the NE., and towers in gigantic summits to 18,000-20,000 feet elevation. Tiratsh-Mir, standing on the frontier of Chitral, is assumed to be 25,400 feet. A branch or outlier of the Hindu-Kush is the Safid- (or Sefid-) Koh, "White Mountains," which in the Sikaram, S. of Jelalabad, rises to 15,600 feet. Afghanistan is made largely inaccessible by reason of its distance from the sea, its inhospitable sands, and the bold mountain fastnesses that interlock it. Among the most famous of the mountain-passes are the Khaiber (Khyber), conducting to Peshawur, and in the line of one of the main caravan routes—frequently spoken of as the "key to India"—and the Bolan Pass, in the S., along the line of railroad from Chaman to Quetta. Although by far the greater portion of Afghanistan is a land of deserts and mountains, of inhospitable character, there are many fertile valleys, well watered, covered with clover, thyme, violets, and odoriferous plants, and remarkable for their picturesque beauty. In these spots grain is grown in abundance, and fruits of all kinds abound, including oranges, grapes, pomegranates, apricots, apples, quinces, peaches, pears, plums, almonds, and walnuts. The most extensive of these valleys or plains is that of Kabul; but there is also an exceedingly rich level tract in the vicinity of Herat. A great part of Seistan, in the SW. part, is a mere desert, as is likewise a large portion of the adjacent country, extending over a space of about 300 miles in length by 100 in breadth.

The climate is various, the cold being often severe in the higher regions, and the heat intense in the lower. The summits of the mountains are often covered with snow, while the summer heat of the plains is almost intolerable. At Kandahar, the thermometer is frequently above 110° in the shade; while in winter the inhabitants suffer from cold, fuel being extremely scarce. At Kabul, at an elevation of about 6000 feet, the snow lies for several successive months, during which the people remain in their houses and sleep close to the stoves, the thermometer falling to 5° or 6° below zero. A greater extreme degree of cold, —10° to —15°, is known at Ghuzni (7700 feet). The prevailing winds are from the west, and are in general cold; the easterly winds are hot. There is little rainfall, and agriculture is largely dependent upon the system of underground irrigation known as the "karez." The climate, on the whole, however, is favorable to the human constitution, and in some parts highly salubrious; diseases are few, the principal being fevers, agues, smallpox, and ophthalmia.

The chief rivers are the Helmund, Kabul, Heri-Rud, and Murghab, besides the Amu-Darya, on the northern border, etc., but none is of great volume. The only lake of any size is that of Abistada, which lies about 60 miles SW. of Ghuzni, and has a length of about 17 miles. Its brackish waters appear nowhere to have a depth exceeding 6 feet. The vegetation in the lowlands is like that of India; rice, cotton, the sugar-cane, millet, maize, and turmeric are raised. In the uplands the timber-trees, herbs, and fruits of Europe grow, and wheat, barley, beans, turnips, mustard, and grasses are cultivated. Kabul excels in the variety and excellence of its fruits. Tobacco is extensively produced. Gold, silver, mercury, iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, sulphur, and naphtha are met with. Arts and husbandry are in a very low condition; carpets are made at Herat, but other manufactures are few, mostly confined to cotton, woollen, felt, and silk stuffs for home use, with saddlery, harness, and cattle-trappings. Sheep and goats are abundant, producing a fine wool, used in the manufacture of shawls. The exports consist chiefly of madder, saffetida, indigo, tobacco, fruits, horses, furs, shawls, wool, and carpets. The transit trade is considerable, and wholly conducted by means of camels and horses, the employment of wheeled vehicles, except on the single wagon-road (constructed in 1879-80) leading from Kabul to Peshawur, being impracticable. The great mass of the inhabitants of Afghanistan are of the Afghan race and Mohammedans of the Sunni sect. The Afghans belong to the Iranian branch of the Indo-European race, and speak the Pushtu language. The dominant tribe of the Afghans is that of the Durani, settled mainly in the western part of the country. In the E. are their kinsmen, the warlike Ghilzais. The population of Tatar stock includes the Hazaras and Aimaks, and the Usbeks in Turkestan. In addition there are the Tajiks (of Iranian stock), the Kafir, and large numbers of Jews, Persians, Arabs, and Baluchis. The country is under a hereditary ruler, styled "ameer." Perhaps no people in the world are more turbulent or more impatient of restraint than the Afghans. The chief cities are Kabul (the capital), Kandahar, Herat, Jelalabad, and Ghuzni. The modern state of Afghanistan may be said to date from the middle of the eighteenth century, when the Durani leader, Ahmed Shah, freed the country from Persian domination. The advance of Russia into Turkestan and of the British towards the Indus in the first half of the nineteenth century caused Afghanistan, owing to her geographical position, to become an important factor in the rivalry between the two powers. The efforts of England to obtain diplomatic control over the country have led to two bloody wars, 1839-42 and 1878-80.

Afium-Karahissar, A'fion-ká-rá-his-sar ("Black Castle of Opium"), a city of Turkey, in Asia Minor, 50 miles SSE. of Kütahia, at the junction of the railroad lines leading from Constantinople and Smyrna to Konieh. Pop. about 20,000. It is built on a rocky eminence, the summit of which is crowned by the ruins of an old castle. It has numerous mosques, chapels, baths, khans, manufactures of felts, carpets, arms, saddlery, stirrups, and a large trade in opium, grown near it, whence its name.

Afenz, Af'lents, a village of Styria, on the Mur.

Afognak, A'fóg-nák, an inhabited island off the coast of Alaska, N. of Kadiak, and separated from the mainland by Shelikof Strait.

Afragola, A-frá-go-lá, a town of Italy, 6 miles NNE. of Naples. It has extensive manufactures of straw bonnets.

Africa, af-re-ká (Gr. Lib'ya; Fr. Afrique, A'frek; Ger. Afrika, A'fre-ká; It. Sp., and Port. Africa (A'fre-ká), a vast peninsular continent connected with Asia by the Isthmus of Suez. It is bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, on the E. by the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, on the S. by the Southern Ocean, and on the W. and SW. by the Atlantic Ocean. Its points of furthest extension are Cape Blanco in the N. (lat. 37° 20' N.), Cape Agulhas (34° 51' S.) in the S., Ras Hafun (not Cape Guardafui) in the E. (lon. 51° 28' E.), and Cape Verde (17° 34' W.) in the W. Its greatest length is thus about 4900 miles (N.-S.), while the breadth is not very much less. The area is estimated at 11,500,000 sq. m. The coast-line, which measures about 16,000 miles, is less indented than that of the other continents, and presents few good harbors, and no great gulfs or inlets except the Gulf of Guinea, which is only a gradual bend or trending of the shore. The civilization of Africa has been retarded by this compact configuration, which offers few facilities for penetrating into the interior by navigable waters. Africa lies mainly in the torrid zone, and is the warmest of all the continents. Its population is estimated to be about 170,000,000.

Face of the Country.—The African continent may be said to consist essentially of a vast plateau or series of plateaus, which, with lower elevations in the north, gradually attain to heights of 3000-4000 feet in the equatorial regions, and of 5000-6000 feet and more further southward. The most depressed regional portion of this system of heights is the Sudan, which in places, as at Adamawa, descends to within 500 feet of the sea-level, and rarely rises to 2000 feet. The Sahara, the most extensive desert-land of the globe, attains an average elevation of perhaps 1400-1600 feet, with mountain-peaks and ridges rising to three and four times this elevation (in Tibesti, 7800 feet). Yet in this region, not far from the southern borders of the Great Atlas, there are low spots or depressions whose surfaces are actually beneath the level of the sea. Such are the Shotts Melhir (—70 feet) and Jerid, lying westward of the Gulf of Gabes. (See SAHARA.) The interior plateaus, more particularly in the E. and S., are bordered by lofty supporting mountains, which fall in rapid terraces to the sea. This condition is found in many parts of the southern coast mountains, and also in the long line of plateau heights which define the depression of the Red Sea and prolong northward the lofty table-land of Abyssinia, with an altitude of 7000–9000 feet. In its plateau construction Africa appears to have the greatest general elevation of all the continents, about 2500 feet.

Mountain-Systems.—Africa has no mountain-chains that are in any way comparable with the Andes, Rocky Mountains, or Himalayas, and none of the summits, excepting those of a number of extinct volcanoes, attain the full height of the loftiest peaks of the Alps. An almost continuous series of ancient mountains, of which parts are known as the Roggeveld, Nieuweveld, Storm, Kathlamba (or Drakenberg), and Lebombo Mountains, and which rise in numerous peaks to 7000–9000 feet, contour most of the southern half of the continent, and define the coast-line. The Mont-aux-Sources and Champagne Castle, in the Drakenberg, are upward of 10,000 and 11,000 feet high. The Atlas Mountains of northern Africa, which may be considered to be a fragmental portion of the system of the Alpe-Apennines of Europe, and to have their continuation in the rock of Gibraltar and the Sierra Ronda, etc., in Spain, are probably the most accentuated of the mountain-systems of the continent. Their highest summit appears to be the Jebel Ayashi, in Morocco, about 14,000 feet. (See ATLAS MOUNTAINS.) The highest summits of Africa are the extinct equatorial cones Kilima-Njaro and Kenia, sometimes without reason called the "Mountains of the Moon," the former being 19,710 feet (Kaiser-Wilhelm Spitze) and the latter about 17,200 feet. The Ruwenzori Mountains, which overlook the Semliki Valley, in the region of the head-streams of the Nile, appear to be in part, at least, of volcanic origin, and possibly reach an elevation of 16,000 feet. Other lofty or well-known summits of Africa and the African islands are Ras Dashan, in Abyssinia, 15,150 feet; Fako, the highest peak of the Kameruns (Cameroons), 13,370 feet; Pico de Teyde, or Teneriffe, 12,300 feet; Clarence Peak, on the Island of Fernando Po, 9350 feet; and Table Mountain, overlooking Cape Town, 3550 feet.

The only active volcanoes of Africa that are known to-day are comprised in a series of giant cones of the east-central regions, lying north of Lake Kivu, and in a number of minor cones that are part of the region of Lakes Rudolf and Stefanie. The former, which are often referred to as the volcanoes of the Mfumbiro group, embrace, among other summits, the fiery Kirungu-Cha-Gungo (Kirunga or Mount Gözen, 11,300 feet, with a crater one mile wide) and Kirungu-Ndogo (11,000 feet), and the now dormant (?) Mount Eyres, 13,000 feet.

There are no glaciers of any real magnitude, and such as exist belong to the Kilima-Njaro—Kenia Mountains, where they cling to the upper slopes. The line of perpetual snow is reached on Kilima-Njaro at 16,400 feet, on the Ras Dashan at 14,000 feet, and on the Great Atlas at about 12,000 feet. Evidences of a past glaciation occur, it is claimed, at an elevation of about 6000–7000 feet, or lower, on the Great Atlas of Morocco, and also over the lower highlands of South Africa.

Rivers.—The chief water-systems of Africa are comprised in the Nile, Congo, Niger, Zambezi, Orange, and the Limpopo Rivers. The Nile is, after the Mississippi-Missouri system of waters, perhaps the longest stream in the world, although it can hardly exceed the Amazon-Ucayali. It drains an area (about 1,000,000 sq. m.) considerably less than the Congo, and less than half of that which is drained by the Amazon and its tributaries. The Congo and Niger are of about equal length, approximately 2500 miles; but the drainage basin of the former, which occupies what might be called the nuclear part of the continent, is much the largest of any of the African rivers, covering about 1,400,000 sq. m., about an eighth more than is covered by the Mississippi-Missouri basin. The sources of the Nile and Congo, the one river directed northward and the other westward, are located within a short distance of each other, in the hills and lowlands which define the Victoria-Tanganyika region. For the characteristics of the major African streams, see NILE, CONGO, NIGER, ZAMBEZI, etc. The capabilities of the African rivers as avenues of approach to the interior are somewhat limited, owing to their being either obstructed by sand-bars at the mouths or by rapids and cataracts at no great distance from the coast. In the course of the Zambezi River are the famous Victoria Falls, which in grandeur and volume of water are frequently compared with the Niagara. (See VICTORIA FALLS.) About one-third of the continent, which is comprised mainly in the Sahara and a portion of the Mediterranean border, has no externally directed drainage.

Lakes.—Africa, after North America, has the most extensive system of fresh-water lakes of any of the continents. With but insignificant exceptions, they are all situated in the zone of rains, about 13 degrees on either side of the equator, where likewise the main streams have their sources. Of these lakes the largest is the Victoria Lake or Victoria Nyansa, the great feeding basin of the Nile, situated directly under the equator, and with an area about equal to that of Scotland; it is, after Lake Superior, the largest body of fresh water on the globe, measuring 270 miles in length, and covering an area estimated at 27,000 sq. m. It lies at an elevation of about 3800 feet above sea-level, and has a greatest depth exceeding 600 feet. Lake Tanganyika, a periodic feeder, through the Lukuga, of the Congo, with an area about equal to that of Lake Baikal in Siberia, is the second in size of the African lakes, measuring about 400 miles in length from north to south, and having a width ranging from 20 to 45 miles. Its surface waters stand at an elevation of about 2700 feet, and the depth of the trough is said to be in places 2000 feet. Other lakes are Nyassa (basin of the Shiré), Bangweolo, Moero, —all three partly in British Central Africa and Rhodesia; Kivu, connected by the Rusizi with northern Tanganyika; Albert Edward Nyansa and Albert Nyansa, connected with one another by the Semliki River, and tributary to the Nile; Rudolf and Stefanie, in British East Africa, the latter now nearly extinguished through desiccation; Leopold II., in the western part of the Congo Free State; Chad, in central Sudan, a shallow pan of water having no outlet, and lying at an elevation of only about 820 feet above the sea; Tsana (Dembea), situated on the Abyssinian plateau at an elevation of about 5700 feet, and discharging into the Blue Nile; and Ngami, south of the Zambesi River, which has practically disappeared, and been converted into a muddy plain or desert. For the characteristics of the different lakes see the various separate articles.

Great Rift Valleys.—Under this name are designated what appear to be two long narrow troughs or "sunken blocks" of the earth's crust, comprising the basin of Lake Nyassa, and extending northward from it in somewhat divergent lines: one passing almost due northward to (and including) Lake Rudolf, and the other through Tanganyika, Kivu, Albert Edward Nyansa, and Albert Nyansa to perhaps the same position, enclosing between their declivities the elevated or hanging plateau into which is sunk the rock-basin of the Victoria Lake. It appears now almost certain that these two largely parallel lines of depression, whose features are still sharply incised, mark areas of weakness in the African crust, and represent successive breakages and subsidences of a geographically modern date. Their downfall has determined the position of the linearly disposed lakes that trend north and south on either side of the Victoria Lake. From Lake Rudolf (and Stefanie) the breakage is carried into the trough of the Red Sea, and from its northeastern horn, the Gulf of Akabah, into the Dead Sea and the Jordan Valley.

Islands.—The principal islands ordinarily considered as belonging to Africa are Madagascar, the Mascarenes (Mauritius, Réunion, Rodrigues), Comoros, Amirantes, Seychelles, and Socotra, in the Indian Ocean; Madeira, the Canaries, Cape Verde and Guinea Islands (Fernando Po, Principe, St. Thomé, Annobon), in the Atlantic; and, more remotely, St. Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha.

Climate.—Africa lies mostly in the torrid zone, and is the hottest of all the continents; but the greatest heat is not necessarily found under the equator, for here the heat is in great part tempered by the great elevation of the surface, by the shade of dense forests, and by copious rains, which fall almost incessantly during six or more months of the year. The Sahara and the Sudan concentrate the greatest heat, and the former more especially is the source of supply of the hot winds that blow elsewhere, and are known as the Sirocco in Morocco and the trans-Mediterranean regions, Khamsin in Egypt, and Harmattan in other parts. The highest temperature recorded is probably 135° (shade), found near Murzuk in the Fezzan. In the region about Timbuktu the mean annual temperature is about 86°. The Arabs say of the Sahara that "the soil is like fire and the wind like a flame." Whirlwinds extremely hot and dry, carrying sand up into the atmosphere, often occur in these deserts. The western coast of Africa between the tropics is very unhealthy. The miasma of the swamps, marshes, and rivers gives its climate a fatal distinction for pestilential malaria. The regions of the Senegal and Niger are particularly unhealthy. The year in Africa (except the Sahara) is for the greater part divided into two seasons, the wet, which is the coldest season, and the dry, which is the period of greatest heat. Some regions, however, have two wet seasons in a year. In Abyssinia, Bornu, and Soudan the rainy season is between April and October. Near the mouth of the Zambesi, and in other parts of southern Africa, the rainy season commences in October or November and continues till about March. The Guinea Coast has its greater rainy season from March to June, and its lesser rains occur in October and November. The greatest concentration of rain is found in the well-watered and densely forested regions of the equatorial belt, but the amount falling nowhere equals that over the valley of the Amazon or in different parts of India and Assam. In the region of the great lakes Speke noted 238 rainy days in the course of a year. The average annual rainfall at Zanzibar is about 100 inches. The Sahara, except in or about the mountainous tracts, is largely a rainless area, and the same is true in a measure of the lesser desert region of the Kalahari in the south. Except on the high mountains and plateaus no extreme cold is known on the African continent, but the temperature not rarely descends to the freezing point on the lowlands; and even in the summer-time, and in the main desert, when the noon-time temperature may have been 180°-110°, an evening cold of 32° and less is frequently brought about as the result of extremely rapid radiation from the heated rock surfaces. The climate of the eastern plateau region is, over large areas, refreshingly mild and salubrious. The average temperatures of the extreme months of the year at various points in Africa are given in the following table:

	Jan.	July.		Jan.	July.
Cairo .....	55.8	86	Gondokoro .....	89.3	78.5
Keneb, Egypt .....	62	94.3	Ankober, Abyssinia .....	52	58
Kuka, Bornu .....	75.6	83.8	Zanzibar .....	83.3	77.1
Sierra Leone .....	82	77.5	Cape Town .....	74.8	57.6
Mouth of Niger ..	86	80.2	Elmina, Gold Coast ..	79.7	76.7

Mineral Resources.—Many parts of Africa are rich in minerals, but the developed mineral wealth is principally in the south, where coal, gold, and diamonds have been largely exploited. The main gold-field of the Transvaal (now Transvaal Colony), which is bordered by the ridge known as the Witwatersrand, and is hence known as The Rand, is the greatest producer of the world, and its annual output before the recent Anglo-Boer War was for many years nearly $50,000,000. The gold occurs in placers and reef-quartz, but principally in the conglomerate or "banket." The richest diamond-mine of the world is that of the Kimberley district, in Cape Colony, where the yearly output has been for a number of years valued at not less than $20,000,000. A fairly extensive diamond-field is also operated at Jagersfontein, in the Orange River Colony (formerly Orange Free State).

Vegetable Productions.—The floral regions of the African continent may be roughly grouped as follows: 1, the region lying north of or bordering the desert, which is a transition tract between Europe and western Asia; 2, the desert region of the Sahara, with its scattered terobinth bushes, and oases rich in palms and cultivated fruits; 3, the great and almost impenetrable primeval forest of the central and west equatorial regions; 4, the lofty savannah and "park" country of the east, with its scatterings of acacia, baobab, and doum palm; 5, the grassy plains or barrens of the south, the home of countless antelopes; and 6, the eastern mountain zones. In the extreme north, groves of oranges and olives, plains covered with barley, maize, and wheat, forests of evergreen oaks, pines, and cork-trees, intermixed with the fig-tree, cypresses, arbutus, sandarach (Callitriche), and myrtle, form the principal features of the landscape. Among the indigenous and cultivated plants of Egypt are the papyrus, cotton, doum palm, acacia, onion, lotus, tamarind, wheat, and rice. In the arid region which lies S. of the Atlas Mountains and on the borders of Sahara, the date palm (Phoenix dactylifera) is very abundant and forms the characteristic feature. It is peculiarly adapted to a hot and dry climate, and flourishes where few other trees could grow. The natives of these regions depend on the date almost entirely for their subsistence, and use the sap of the tree as a beverage. Palms of different species are found in nearly all parts of the continent except the extreme south. The coffee-tree grows in Benguela, Liberia, and Abyssinia. The last named, possibly its native country, also produces oranges, lemons, and peaches. Senegambia and other tropical regions produce the baobab or monkey-bread tree (Adansonia digitata), the trunk of which attains a diameter of 20 feet. The region which lies between lat. 10° N. and 10° S. is mostly covered with dense forests of gigantic trees and a rank growth of underbrush and creeping plants almost impervious to the rays of a vertical sun. The great Congo forest, in its grandeur, age, and vast solitudes, is perhaps, after that of the Amazon, the most impressive of all the forest tracts of the globe. Ancient foresters stand where they have not unlikely been growing for 2000 years and more. Among the valuable productions of the western coast and tropical portions are the cotton-tree, coffee, the Elaeis Guineensis, which affords palm oil and wine, the cabbage palm, butter-tree, banana, gum copal, yam, papaw, pea-nut (Arachis hypogaea), tamarind, and custard-apple. Frankincense, myrrh, cinnamon, and other spices grow in northeastern Africa. In the temperate parts of South Africa heaths grow in great profusion and are the most characteristic vegetation. The timber-line on Kilimanjaro, which is followed by an Alpine zone of about 3000 feet, occupies the singularly low position of 10,500 feet.

Animal Life.—The African fauna is in the trans-Saharan region of a Mediterranean or Eurasiatic type, with many species—as the Barbary ape, fallow-deer, wild-boar, wolf, fox, and jackal—common to Europe. The lion (although now but sparingly), leopard, and hyena are also found in this region, and seemingly the elephant was an inhabitant of the border tract in a late prehistoric (or, perhaps, even historic) period. The Saharan region, which separates the Eurasiatic from the true African fauna, is characterized more by a deficiency of animal forms than by types that are peculiar to it. The larger animals of prey, except in the regions of cultivation or fairly developed vegetation, rarely enter far within its precincts, although a good food-supply could be obtained from the numerous antelopes (gaselles) which frequent certain parts. The true African fauna, the Ethiopian of zoogeographers, is that of the region comprised between the Sudan and the Cape, a fauna that is pre-eminently distinguished by the very large number and variety of its hoofed animals—elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, buffalo, giraffe, zebra, and some 80 species or more of antelope, ranging in size from a rabbit to an ox. Some of the species have here a remarkably broad distribution, the hippopotamus, for example, being found in the streams of the western part of the continent, as well as in those of the east. All the more predatory of the African carnivora are found in the Ethiopian tract. Africa is pre-eminently the home of the higher or anthropoid apes, and comprises probably two or more species of both the chimpanzee and gorilla, whose central home is the great equatorial forest. The large and ferocious dog-faced baboons penetrate quite to the outskirts of civilization in the south, and other monkeys or apes are found elsewhere. Madagascar and parts of E. Africa are the home of the lemurs or half-apes.

Many interesting speculations have been put forth with regard to the origin and composition of the African fauna, and it has been generally held that a part, or even great part, of it had been obtained through migration from Europe, at a time, following upon the advent of the Glacial Epoch, when a number of "bridges" still spanned the separating expanse of the Mediterranean. The main support to this theory is the finding of the remains of numerous species of the so-called African fauna in late Tertiary and Post-Tertiary deposits of the northern continent, coupled with the known condition that until geologically recent times Africa was united at one or more points with Europe. Such positions of union are plainly indicated opposite Gibraltar and in the broken mass of the Atlas which trends eastward from Cape Bon, in Tunis, and heads towards Sicily and the Apennines. It may, however, be that the extinct European fauna of African type was in itself a derivative from Africa, or, again, that both faunas had a primal Asiatic home, whence westerly migrations set out in two or more lines. A portion of the South African fauna, as represented in such types as the edentates (aardvark, etc.) and ostrich, which have affinities with closely related or analogous forms in South America, argues in favor of the former union of the continent with an austral land with which South America, and not impossibly also Australia, were united. Again, it would appear almost certain that at a no very remote period east-central and southern Africa were united with India across what is now Indian Ocean. To the hypothetical land-mass which is assumed to have made this connection, and of which Madagascar, Réunion, and the Seychelles are thought to be parts, the name of "Lemuria" has been given.

Population and Races.—Between the Mediterranean Sea and about lat. 15° or 20° N. the population consists largely of tribes or races that are not indigenous, being Arabs, Turks, and Frenchmen, who have gained possession by conquest. Egypt is in part peopled by Copts, supposed to be descendants of the ancient Egyptians, but probably a mixed race. They profess the Christian religion, and speak a peculiar language called Coptic. The Moors, who dwell in the cities of Morocco, represent a mixture of various racial elements. They are Mohammedans, and their speech is a corrupt Arabic. A large majority of the African population belongs to two fundamental races, the Berbers (including here the Kabyles and Tuaregs) and the Negroes or Ethiopic race. The Berbers are nomadic tribes who occupy the mountainous regions of Barbary and the Sahara. The Berber nation, representing one of the Hamitic stocks of the Caucasian race, is one of great antiquity, and ever since the earliest historical period has been spread over northern Africa (Mauritania and Numidia). The people are athletic, warlike, and addicted to predatory modes of gaining a subsistence. They are zealous Mohammedans.

The Ethiopic race occupies central Africa and nearly all the countries between Cape Colony and the 15th parallel of N. latitude. A line drawn from the mouth of the Senegal to Cape Guardafui passes near the northern limit of the negro population. They are characterised by thick lips, woolly hair, and receding foreheads, with a skin which varies from black to brown. Mohammedanism and Fetishism are the prevailing religions of Africa. Human sacrifices are practised by some tribes on great occasions. Among the principal negro nations are the Mandingoes, the Fulahs, Yoloofs, and Ashantis, and the most assertive native monarchies or kingdoms are, or have been until recently, Bornu, Baghirmi, Wadai, Ashanti, and Dahomey. The true home of these peoples is the Sudan, called by the Arabs Beled-ee-Sudan, the "Land of the Blacks." They are in a low state of intellectual development, have made little progress in civilisation, and can hardly be said to have any political institutions.

Most of the Ethiopian region south of the equator, together with parts of the valley of the Nile (Nubia), is inhabited by an impure negro stock, to which the name of Negroid is now frequently applied. To it belong the numerous Bantu peoples, of whom the Kaffirs, Zulus, Bechuanas, and Swahilis are the best known exponents. Little is known regarding the origin and relations of the dwarfed Bushmen, who have nearly disappeared as a true race, and their connections, the impure Hottentots, but some ethnologists are disposed to consider them as possibly the most ancient of the African races, and even as the progenitors of the true Negro and Negroid types. They are now generally associated with the various tribes of pygmies that have latterly been discovered in the equatorial wilds of the continent, the Akkas, Dokos, and Obongos, some of whose members hardly exceed 3½ feet in height.

European Possessions.—Algeria and Tunis, with vast areas of the inner Sahara, belong to or are claimed by the French, who have possessions also on the Senegal and Gambia, and the western Sudan, and control a district along the Atlantic coast N. of the Congo Free State (French Congo) and on the N. of the Gulf of Guinea. The British exercise sway over much of South Africa, from the Cape to Lake Tanganyika, and on the Guinea Coast, and control a district on the E. coast N. of Zanzibar (British East Africa) and practically Egypt, together with a large part of the eastern Sudan. The Portuguese have possessions on the E. coast in old Mozambique (Portuguese East Africa), and on the W. coast in Angola and Benguela, along with several islands in the Atlantic Ocean. The Canary Islands belong to the Spaniards, who also have possessions at Fernando Po and Annobon, the port of Ifni, N. of Cape Nun, and the coast land between Capes Bojador and Blanco. Since 1884 Germany has had control over Togoland on the Slave Coast, the Kamerun region (with the Hinterland extending to Lake Chad), a coast district of about 900 miles between Angola on the N. and the Orange River on the S. (German Southwest Africa), and a region on the E. coast extending from the Rovuma River NW. to Victoria Nyanza (German East Africa). Italy has control over a district bordering on the Red Sea from Massowah to Assab Bay. The vast Congo Free State may be regarded as a dependency of Belgium. Morocco and Abyssinia are now the only two really independent powerful realms of the continent.

History of Discovery.—Northeastern Africa was the home of one of the first civilized nations of the world,—the Egyptians. The famous and powerful state of Carthage afterwards occupied northern Africa, which subsequently became a part of the Roman empire. It is supposed that the peninsular part of Africa was known to the ancients, and that the Phœnicians circumnavigated it. The people who first explored the interior of northern Africa were the Arabs. The Portuguese navigators of the fifteenth century were the first to complete the circumnavigation of Africa.

They discovered the Cape of Good Hope in 1487, and Vasco da Gama doubled that cape in 1498. The Dutch planted a colony at the Cape of Good Hope in 1652. Bruce travelled in Abyssinia about 1770, following by a few years upon the labors, in Egypt, of Carsten Niebuhr, who is justly considered to be the "founder" of the Suez route as the avenue of commerce between Europe and India. In 1788 the African Association was formed in London to promote the exploration of Africa, and under its auspices Mungo Park, Burchardt, and others made important discoveries. In 1822-24, Denham, Clapperton, and Oudney crossed the desert of Sahara, and discovered Lake Chad and Bornu. Caillié, in 1827-28, starting from Sierra Leone, crossed the Sahara and Atlas Mountains to Tangier, in the course of his journey entering Timbuktu, which had been reached two years before him by the English traveller Laing. In 1830, Lander explored the Joliba or Niger to its mouth. Rebmann and Krapf discovered Kilima-Njaro in 1848. Between 1849 and 1864, Livingstone explored South Africa, and made important contributions to the geography of the country, especially of the regions of the Zambesi and Nyassa. In 1858, Lakes Tanganyika and Victoria Nyanza were discovered by Burton and Speke, the latter in a subsequent journey demonstrating that the Victoria Lake was the main feeding basin of the Nile. The journey in 1862-64 of Sir Samuel Baker established the existence of the Albert Nyanza. In 1867-68, Livingstone discovered the Luapula, the eastern head-stream of the Congo, and its two reservoirs, Lakes Moero and Bangweolo. In 1874-77, Stanley crossed the continent via the great lakes and the Congo River, and in subsequent years explored the course of the Congo, and finally established, under the auspices of the King of the Belgians and with the co-operation of other commercial nations, the Congo Free State. (See CONGO FREE STATE.) Other eminent explorers of the African continent, whose labors are comprised between the years 1850 and the present time, are Barth, Overweg, Vogel, Rohlf, Naeltigal, Heuglin, Schweinfurth, Lenz, Cameron, Serpa Pinto, Holub, Brassa, Emin Pasha, Wissmann, Donaldson Smith, Marchand, and Fourneau, the last named, in 1897-1900, accomplishing an extraordinary journey from Biskra, via Lake Chad, to the mouth of the Congo.

Africa, a designation applied by the Romans to the region about Carthage, corresponding approximately to the modern Tunis. Later they gave the name to a much larger division, including Tunis, Tripoli, and part of Algeria.

African Islands, a group of low islets in the Indian Ocean, N. of the Amirante Islands. Lat. 4° 55' S.

Afrikiyah, or Afrikiyah. See MEHRIA.

Afton, a banking post-borough of the Cherokee Nation, I.T., on the St. Louis and San Francisco R., 38 miles W. by S. of Neosho, Mo. Pop. in 1900, 350.

Afton, a banking post-town of Union co., Iowa, on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R., 9 miles E. of Creston. It has various factories, and is in a grain and stock region. Pop. in 1900, 1178.

Afton, a post-hamlet of Tensas parish, La.

Afton, a post-village of Washington co., Minn., on Lake St. Croix, 16 miles ESE. of St. Paul. Pop. of Afton township, 1130.

Afton, a hamlet of Frontier co., Neb., 10 miles N. of Cambridge.

Afton, a post-village of Morris co., N.J., 12 miles NNE. of Madison. Pop. about 350.

Afton, a banking post-village of Chenango co., N.Y., on the Susquehanna River and on the Delaware and Hudson R., 28 miles E. by N. of Binghamton. It has various manufactures in wood, etc. Pop. in 1900, 722; of the town of the same name, 1920.

Afton, a post-hamlet of Clermont co., Ohio, and a station on the Cincinnati, Portsmouth and Virginia R., 5 miles E. of Batavia.

Afton, a post-village of Green co., Tenn., on the Southern R., 5 miles (direct) E. by N. of Greeneville. Pop. about 150.

Afton, a post-village and watering-place of Nelson co., Va., on the Chesapeake and Ohio R., where it crosses or perforates the Blue Ridge, 16 miles SE. of Staunton. It is situated 1405 feet above sea-level. Here is a tunnel 1 mile long in the Blue Ridge.

Afton, a post-village of Rock co., Wis., on the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 8 miles N. by W. of Beloit.

Afton, a post-town of Uinta co., Wyo., in a timber region, 100 miles N. by E. of Evanston. It has shingle, saw, and planing-mills. Pop. about 350.

Afzulgurh, Afsalgarh, or Ufsulgarh, ūf'ul-gūr, a town of British India, Bijnaur district, near the Kumaon Mountains. Lat. 29° 26' N.; lon. 78° 40' E. Pop. about 8000.

Agá, á-gá, a low granitic mountain-chain of Arabia, forming part of the NW. limit of Nejd.

Agades, or Agadés, á-gá-dés, a city of Africa, capital of the kingdom of Asben (Air), in an oasis of the Sahara. Lat. 17° N.; lon. 8° 10' E. Agades was formerly a large city, with a population of from 50,000 to 60,000, but its importance has very much declined. The dominant people of the district are the Tuaregs.

Agadir, á-gá-deer, or Santa Cruz, the most southern port of Morocco, 23 miles SE. of Cape Ghir. Lat. 30° 28' N.; lon. 9° 35' W. Pop. 700. It was formerly a considerable seaport.

Ala, á-lá, a town of Austria, Tyrol, on the left bank of the Adige, and on a railway, 10 miles SSW. of Roveredo. Pop. 5000, employed in manufactures of silks and velvets.

Alabama, al-a-bah'má, a river of the state of Alabama, is formed by the Coosa and Tallapoosa Rivers, which unite on the S. border of Elmore co., about 10 miles NNE. of Montgomery. Between this capital city and Selma its general direction is westward. From Selma it runs nearly southward, with a very tortuous course, until it unites with the Tombigbee River at the S. extremity of Clarke co. and about 33 miles (in a direct line) N. of Mobile. The stream formed by this junction is the Mobile River. The length of the Alabama from the mouth of the Coosa to the mouth of the Tombigbee is about 350 miles. Steamboats can ascend it to Montgomery, 390 miles above Mobile, at all times except in seasons of unusual drought. The country through which it flows is fertile, and produces large crops of cotton.

Alabama (a Muscogee or Creek word, signifying a "place of rest"), one of the Southern States of the American Union, is bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Georgia and Florida, S. by Florida and the Gulf of Mexico, and W. by Mississippi. Extreme length, 336 miles; greatest breadth, 220 miles; area, 51,540 sq. m. The northern boundary lies on lat. 35° N.

Face of the Country, etc.—The Alleghany and Cumberland Mountains enter the state from the N.E.; but they are nowhere much more than 1500 feet high, and to the S. they decline, until in the centre of the state they become mere hills. Southward of this picturesque central hill-region, and constituting the main central zone of the state, is the cotton-belt, including the "cane-brake region,"—one of the most fertile tracts of cotton-land in the world. Farther south the "pine woods" occupy a large sparsely populated area, largely of lowland, and capable of producing vast supplies of timber (especially of yellow pine) and naval stores. Most parts of the state abound in timber-trees, including pine, oak, cypress, and red cedar. The greater part of the state is drained into the Gulf of Mexico by the Mobile River, formed by the junction of the Alabama and Tombigbee Rivers. The northern section is traversed by the Tennessee River, and the Chattahoochee River forms the southern half of the eastern boundary.

Geology and Minerals.—In the east-central part of the state is an area of more than 4000 sq. m., consisting of Archean and ancient highly altered sedimentary rocks, and characterised by a diversity of composition, as well as by a great variety of topography and soil. To the N. and W. lies the Coosa valley, a continuation of the complex valley extending SW. from Pennsylvania, in portions of which, and thence N. and W., lie the coal-measures, the productive area of which covers over 5000 sq. m. The principal fields are the Coosa, Cahaba, and Warrior, the last having an extent about two-thirds that of the coal-fields of Great Britain. It occupies the upper valley of the Black Warrior River. The coals are bituminous, and the annual output increased between 1870 and 1903 from 11,000 to 11,650,000 tons. A considerable part of this output is consumed in the state itself, being converted into coke to supply the numerous pig-iron furnaces. The iron-ore is abundant, excellent, and readily accessible. With a production of 2,662,043 long tons of ore in 1899, Alabama ranked as the third iron-producing state of the Union. The product in 1903 was 3,684,960 tons. The Alleghany gold-field has in Alabama its SW. terminus; but the product up to this time has been insignificant. Silver, lead, copper, ochre, steatite, flint, kaolin, statuary granite, lithographic stone, fine white and variegated marbles, and numerous other useful minerals, exist in northern and central Alabama. Considerable deposits of bauxite are found.

The great cotton-belt of south-central Alabama, which occupies parts of 17 counties, lies on the Cretaceous formation and is highly fertile. The pine-region of the S. is principally of the Tertiary and the Post-Tertiary alluvial formation.

Soil, Climate, Healthfulness.—In general this state is fertile, and in the less productive regions in the hill-country there are as compensations abundant water-power, a healthful and agreeable climate, and numerous mineral springs. The pine-woods region affords, besides forest products, considerable honey, wax, and rice, grows sweet potatoes abundantly, and yields fair returns in cotton and maize, while the dryness of the air and soil and the balsamic aroma of the pines are believed to exert a curative effect in pulmonary diseases. The great river valleys and the central Cretaceous belt are exceedingly productive. The climate is comparatively equable, the streams seldom freeze over, while the summer temperature rarely exceeds 95° F.; but the uniformity of the summer heat renders the climate very oppressive to persons of northern birth. The hill-regions are, however, cooler, and the islands of Mobile Bay have delightful sea-breezes. The annual rainfall is about 42 inches.

Internal communication is much facilitated by the navigable streams. Steamboats ply upon the Mobile River and its branches, the Alabama, Coosa, Tallapoosa, Tombigbee, and Black Warrior. There is a regular steamboat service on the Chattahoochee River between Columbus, Ga., and Chattahoochee, Fla., a distance of 224 miles. The only seaport in the state is MOBILE, situated on Mobile Bay, at the mouth of the Mobile River. The shallowness of the waters of the bay obliges large vessels to load and discharge their cargoes by means of lighters; but smaller steamers ply upon the bay, going to New Orleans via Grant's Pass, Mississippi Sound, and Lakes Borgne and Pontchartrain. In 1900 there were 4239 miles of railroad in operation.

Industrial interests.—The wonderful development of the coal and iron industries in the valleys of the Tennessee and of the other streams of northern Alabama has greatly affected the material prosperity of the state. During the decade between 1880 and 1890, such towns as Birmingham, Anniston, Decatur, Florence, and Roanoke leaped from a position of comparative obscurity into one of prominence, while others, such as Bessemer, had no previous existence. Birmingham, with a population of nearly 40,000, is the centre of the coal and iron industry. The manufacture of iron and steel is the leading industry of the state, and the value of its products was, in 1900, $17,400,000. Cotton manufacture has also received much attention, the product of this industry in 1900 being valued at $8,153,136. In the counties at the S., the lumber business has developed into a profitable industry, and large quantities of lumber are shipped to the North, to South America, and to England. The value of the lumber and timber products (in 1900, $12,867,000) ranks immediately after that of iron and steel. With this increased activity in mining and manufacturing operations there has been a relative decline in agricultural pursuits, especially in the fertile "black belt" of central Alabama. Agriculture, nevertheless, maintains its position as the leading economic pursuit of the state. Alabama ranks as one of the leading cotton-raising states, and the quantity of cotton ginned in 1900 was 1,061,678 (commercial) bales. Indian corn is raised in all parts of the state. Tobacco is a staple crop in the N., and in the N. and NE. wheat of excellent quality is grown. Rice is an important crop in the S. Both marsh and upland rice is grown. Wool, dairy and orchard products, oats, honey, wax, pulse, and sweet potatoes are produced to a considerable extent. The leading agricultural crops for 1900 were: corn, 29,355,942 bushels; wheat, 916,351 bushels; oats, 4,380,764 bushels; and hay, 94,061 tons.

Education, etc.—A well-devised school system was established by the constitution of 1868, but the unsettled condition of public affairs for some time impaired its efficiency. Among the educational institutions may be mentioned the state normal schools at Florence, Gaylesville, Jacksonville, and Troy, the Alabama Normal College for girls at Livingston, Blount College at Blountville, Huntsville Academy, the State Agricultural College at Athens, the normal school for colored students at Montgomery, the Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, the Southern University (Methodist) at Greensboro, Tuskegee Institute for colored people, Selma University (also for colored), and the University of Alabama, at Tuscaloosa. There are numerous other colleges, academies, and high schools, and institutions for the blind, deaf and dumb. The state penitentiary is at Wetumpka. There were issued in the state, in 1900, 249 newspapers, of which 22 were daily, 203 weekly, and 16 monthly.

Counties.—There are 66 counties, named as follows: Autauga, Baldwin, Barbour, Bibb, Blount, Bullock, Butler, Calhoun, Chambers, Cherokee, Chilton, Choctaw, Clarke, Clay, Cleburne, Coffee, Colbert, Conecuh, Coosa, Covington, Crenshaw, Cullman, Dale, Dallas, Dekalb, Elmore, Escambia, Etowah, Fayette, Franklin, Geneva, Greene, Hale, Henry, Jackson, Jefferson, Lamar, Lauderdale, Lawrence, Lee, Limestone, Lowndes, Macon, Madison, Marengo, Marion, Marshall, Mobile, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Perry, Pickens, Pike, Randolph, Russell, Shelby, St. Clair, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa, Tuscaloosa, Walker, Washington, Wilcox, and Winston.

Constitution, etc.—The present state constitution was adopted in Nov., 1901. The governor is chosen for a term of four years. The general assembly consists of a house of representatives of 105 members, and a senate of 35 members, chosen for four years. All judges are elective. Voters must have resided in the state two years, and one year in the county where they vote. Alabama sends 9 representatives to the Federal Congress.

Cities and Towns.—Of these the principal are Mobile, the commercial emporium of the state (pop. in 1900, 38,469); Montgomery, the state capital (pop. 30,346); Birmingham (pop. 38,415); Anniston (pop. 9695); and Bessemer (pop. 6358). Other important places are Huntsville (pop. 8068), Selma (pop. 8715), Florence (pop. 6478), Eufaula (pop. 4532), Tuscaloosa (pop. 5094), Opelika, Phenix, New Decatur, Troy, and Gadsden.

History.—The French settled near Mobile Bay in 1702, and founded Mobile about 1711. In 1763 their lands here passed to England, and became a part of West Florida; this coast-tract was seized by the Spaniards during the Revolutionary War, and did not become definitely United States territory until 1819, when Florida was purchased by the general government. But by far the greater part of Alabama, together with what is now called Mississippi, was regarded as a part of Georgia, South Carolina claiming a strip 12 miles wide along the S. boundary of Tennessee. In 1798 the Mississippi territory (including part of Alabama) was set off from Georgia and South Carolina. In 1804 it was extended northward, and in 1813 its limits were extended to the Gulf of Mexico, so that the whole of the present state of Alabama was included in it. What is now the state of Alabama was set off from Mississippi in 1817 as a territory, and became a state in 1819. Prominent events of this period were the sanguinary Creek war (1813-14), the military occupation of Mobile by the Americans, and the settlement of a colony of French political exiles in Marengo co. Under the slaveholding system Alabama grew rich, and became the first state in the amount of cotton produced. In 1861 an ordinance of secession was passed by a state convention. In that year the provisional government of the Confederate States was organized at Montgomery. In 1862 the N. portion of the state was occupied by Federal troops. In 1864 the forts at the outlet of Mobile Bay were reduced and the Confederate fleet destroyed by Farragut; and in April, 1865, Selma, Montgomery, and Mobile were taken by the national forces. In the same year a provisional governor was appointed by President Johnson. In 1868 military control was withdrawn, a new constitution having been adopted, and the state was re-admitted to representation in Congress.

The population in 1820 numbered 127,901; in 1830, 309,527; in 1840, 590,756; in 1850, 771,623; in 1860, 964,201; in 1870, 996,992; in 1880, 1,262,505; in 1890, 1,513,017. There were, in 1820, 41,879 slaves and 571 free colored people; in 1830, 117,694 slaves and 1572 free colored; in 1840, 253,532 slaves, 2039 free colored; in 1850, 342,844 slaves, 2365 free colored; in 1860, 435,080 slaves, 2690 free colored; in 1870, 475,510, in 1880, 600,103, in 1890, 681,431, and in 1900, 827,307 colored persons. Total pop. in 1900 was 1,828,697 (about 35 to the sq. m.), of which number 916,764 were males and 911,933 females, and 14,592 foreign-born. There were 177 Indians in the state, 58 Chinese, and 3 Japanese.

Alabama, or Alabama Center, a post-village in Alabama township (town), Genesee co., N.Y., 8 miles S. of Medina and 34 miles ENE. of Buffalo. The town includes part of the Tonawanda Indian reservation. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1957.

Alabama, a post-hamlet of Polk co., Wis., 24 miles N. of Osceola Mills.

Alabama City, a post-town of Etowah co., Ala., on the Queen and Crescent Route and the Louisville and Nashville R., 2 miles from Gadsden, its nearest banking point. Pop. in 1900, 2276. It has large cotton-industries.

Alabas'ter, a post-village of Iosco co., Mich., on Saginaw Bay, about 45 miles NNE. of Bay City. Pop. about 350. It has a quarry of gypsum.

Alabaster Island, Bahamas. See ELUETHERA.

Alabat, à-là-bát', a small island of the Philippines, in Lamón Bay, N. of the Luzon isthmus. With the mainland it forms a sheltered harbor. It is sterile, and but sparsely inhabited.

Alachua, à-là-ch'u-a, a county in the N. part of Florida, has an area of 1283 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Santa Fé River and on the W. by the Suwanee. Capital, Gainesville. Pop. in 1890, 22,934; in 1900, 32,245.

Alachua, a post-village of Alachua co., Fla., 15 miles NW. of Gainesville, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Alacranes (al-a-krán') Islands, a group in the Gulf of Mexico, about 70 miles N. of Yucatan, on a reef 15 miles in length N. and S. by 12 miles in breadth.

Alacranes, Cuba. See ALFONSO XII.

Alacul'sa Creek, Cherokee co., Ga., is a branch of Little River.

Ala-Dagh, à-là-dág' (i.e., "beautiful mountain"), a mountain-chain of Armenia, extending W. from Mount Ararat. From it descends the Murad-Su, the eastern head-stream of the Euphrates. Height, 11,500 feet.

Ala-Dagh, part of the Taurus range in Asiatic Turkey, forming the NE. continuation of the Bulghar-Dagh.

Aladan (à-là-dán') or Aladine (à-là-deen') Islands, a cluster of small islands in the Bay of Bengal, forming part of the Mergui Archipelago.

Alad'im, a mining post-village of Crook co., Wyo., at the terminus of a railroad, 18 miles from Bellefourche, S. Dak. It has coal-mines.

Aladja-Dagh, à-là-já-dág', a mountain in Transcaucasia, in the district of Kars, memorable for the victory achieved by the Russians over the Turks, Oct. 15, 1877.

Alajelos, à-là-á-hoe, a town of Spain, 30 miles SW. of Valladolid, near the Trabancos. Pop. (commune) 3500.

Ala'sá'a (Sp. pron. à-là-fee'), a post-village of Hillsboro co., Fla., 23 miles E. of Tampa and 1 mile from the Alafia River. The surrounding country is covered by pine forests, has a fertile soil, and produces fine oranges.

Alaghez. See ALAGÖZ.

Alagna, à-lán'yá, a town of Italy, on the Sesia, 13 miles W. of Pavia. Pop. about 1400.

Alagos, à-lá-go-á, a town on the S. shore of the island of St. Michael, Azores.

Alagoas, à-lá-go-ás, a NE. maritime state of Brazil, deriving its name from various intercommunicating lakes for which it is noted. It is bounded N. by the state of Pernambuco and SW. by Sergipe, and comprises an area of 22,600 sq. m. The land is particularly adapted to the growth of coffee, cotton, sugar-cane, tobacco, vanilla, and cacao, and bears large forests. Pop. (estimated) about 600,000. Capital, Maceió.

Alagoas, a city of Brazil, in the state of Alagoas, on the N. of Lake Manguaba, 140 miles NE. of Sergipe. Pop. about 5000.

Alagoinhas, a town of Brazil, in the state of Bahia, and on the railroad connecting with the city of Bahia, about 45 miles NE. of Caxoeira. Pop. about 12,000.

Alagón, à-lá-gón', a river of Spain, falls into the Tagus about 2 miles NE. of Alcantara. It is about 120 miles in length and noted for the size and flavor of its fish.

Alagón, a town of Spain, on the Ebro, 15 miles NW. of Saragossa. Pop. (commune) 3750.

Alagöz, à-lá-gör', a volcanic mountain in the Russian government of Erivan. It lies on the N. side of the great plain of the Araxes. Height, 13,500 feet.

Alai, à-lí', a chain of lofty mountains of central Asia, a westerly extension of the Tian-Shan, in about lat. 40° N. and lon. 70°-73° 30' E. It forms a part of the northern boundary of the Pamir. The highest summits are 18,000-19,000 feet high. Peak Kauffmann (23,000-25,000 feet) is sometimes considered a mountain of the Alai, but it more properly belongs to the main Tian-Shan.

Alais, à-lá' (anc. Ala'isia), a town of France, department of Gard, on the Gardon, at the foot of the Cévennes, 25 miles NW. of Nîmes. Pop. in 1901, about 18,500; of the commune, 24,940. It is in a productive coal-field, and has silk-spinning mills, iron-foundries, glass-works, etc.

Alajuela, à-lá-hwá-lá', a city, capital of Alajuela province, Costa Rica, about 12 miles by rail W. of San José. It is well built, with good streets, and has considerable trade. Pop. 3828. It is the centre of an important coffee district. Pop. of the province in 1897, 69,300.

Alakananda, à-lá-ká-nán-dá', Aluknanda, or Aluknunda, à-look-nun-dá', a small river, which, issuing from the Himalaya Mountains, unites with the Bhagirathi at Devaprayag and forms a source of the Ganges.

Ala-Köi, à-lá-kö-ee' (i.e., "beautiful village"), a village of Asiatic Turkey, on the E. side of Lake Van.

Ala-Kul, à-lá-kool', called also Kurghí-Nor, koor'-ghee nor, or Alakt-Ugul-Nur, à-lákt' oo'gool' noor, a lake of Russian Central Asia, in the province of Semiritchensk. Its centre is near lat. 46° N., lon. 81° 40' E. It is 40 miles long and 17 broad. Elevation, 837 feet. A western smaller lake, separated by a marsh, is also known as Ala-Kul (or Sassyk-Kul).

Alalakeiki (à-lá-lá-ká-ee-kee) Channel, which separates Maui and Kahoolawe, Hawaiian Islands, is 6 miles wide.

Alamakee, a county of Iowa. See ALLAMAKEE.

Al'amance, a county in the N. central part of North Carolina, has an area of 494 sq. m. It is intersected by Haw River and partly drained by Alamance Creek. Capital, Graham. Pop. in 1890, 18,371; in 1900, 25,665.

Alameda, à-lá-má-dá' (i.e., "a row of poplar-trees"), a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 54 miles NW. of Malaga, on the road from Seville to Granada. Pop. about 4000.

Alameda, à-lá-má-dá', a county in the W. part of California, has an area of 764 sq. m. It is bounded on the W. by the Bay of San Francisco, and is drained by Alameda Creek. The surface is diversified by mountains, fertile valleys, and plains; quarries of granite and limestone have been opened here. The market of San Francisco is partly supplied by the orchards and gardens of Alameda. Capital, Oakland. Pop. in 1890, 93,864; in 1900, 130,197.

Alameda, a post-village of Clarke co., Ala. Pop. about 100.

Alameda, a city of Alameda co., Cal., on a peninsula on the E. side of the Bay of San Francisco and on the Southern Pacific R., 9 miles ESE. of San Francisco. It adjoins Oakland on the S., and contains many suburban residences. Its industries embrace ship-building and petroleum- and borax-refining. Pop. in 1890, 11,165; in 1900, 16,464.

Alameda, a post-village of Bernalillo co., N. Mex., on the Rio Grande and on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé R., 6 miles above Albuquerque.

Alameda de la Sagra, à-lá-má-dá dá lá sá'grá, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 8 miles from Illescas.

Alameda del Valle, à-lá-má-dá dél vá'l'yá, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 10 miles from Buitrago.

Alaminos, à-lá-mee-noce, or Sarapasp, sá-ráp'sáp, a pueblo of Zambales province, Luzon, Philippine Islands, on Lingayen Gulf, and 50 miles (direct) N. of Iba. Pop. in 1903, 10,338.

Al'amo, a post-village of Contra Costa co., Cal., 24 miles E. by N. of San Francisco.

Alamo, a post-town of Montgomery co., Ga., 12 miles by rail W. by S. of Mount Vernon. It has lumber- and shingle-mills. Pop. about 200.

Alamo, a post-village of Montgomery co., Ind., about 55 miles WNW. of Indianapolis. Pop. about 250.

Alamo, a post-village of Kalamazoo co., Mich., on a railroad, 8 miles WNW. of Kalamazoo, its banking point. Pop. about 150.

Alamo, a post-village of Grant co., Oregon. Pop. about 100.

Alamo, a banking post-village, capital of Crockett co., Tenn., about 75 miles NE. of Memphis and 6 miles N. of Bella. It was formerly called Caveville. It has several cotton-mills and gins. Pop. about 350.

Al'amogordo, a banking post-village, capital of Otero co., N. Mex., on the El Paso and Northeastern R., 86 miles NNE. of El Paso. It is in an agricultural district. Pop. about 1500.

Al'amo Mills, a post-hamlet of Cass co., Tex., on a railroad, 38 miles N. of Jefferson.

Alamos, a town of Mexico, in the state of Sonora, 132 miles ESE. of Guaymas. It is well built and has a fine church. Pop. about 6000.

Alamo'sa, a banking post-town of Conejos co., Colo., on the Rio Grande and on the Denver and Rio Grande R., 139 miles S. by W. of Cañon City. Elevation, 7545 feet. It has railroad machine-shops. Gold- and silver-mines have been opened in the vicinity. Pop. in 1900, 1141.

Alamuchee, a post-village of Sumter co., Ala. Pop. about 100.

Åland (Åland; Sw. Åland, Öland) Islands, an archipelago of 80 inhabited islands, and a vast number of rocks and islets, in the Gulf of Bothnia, at its entrance, forming part of Finland. Pop. about 24,000, mostly Swedes. These islands were taken from Sweden by Russia in 1809. The principal island, Åland, has a population of about 12,000. On it is the town of Mariehamn.

Åland'ar, a post-hamlet and summer-resort of Berkshire co., Mass., 5 miles SE. of Copake Iron Works Station of the New York Central and Hudson River R.

Alanno, à-làn'no, a town of Italy, 11 miles S. of Penno. Pop. about 1100 (commune, 4000).

Alan'son, a post-village of Emmet co., Mich., on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R., 26 miles S. by W. of Mackinaw. It has manufactures of lumber, shingles, etc. Pop. about 200.

Alanthus Grove, Gentry co., Mo. See ALANTHUS GROVE.

Alaotra, the largest lake of Madagascar, 75 miles NW. of Tamatave. Length, 38 miles.

Alapaha, a river of Georgia. See ALLAPAHA.

Alapayevsk, à-là-pà-yèvsk', a town of Russia, in Perm, 48 miles NW. of Irbít. It has large iron-foundries. Pop. in 1897, 8652.

Alapur, à-là-poor', a small town of the Budaon district, British India.

Alaqua, al'q-quaw, a small river of Florida, flowing into Choctawhatchee Bay.

Alaqua, a small Scotch and Irish settlement in Walton co., Fla., on the above river, about 125 miles W. by N. of Tallahassee.

Al-Araish, a town of Morocco. See EL-ARAIISH.

Alarcón, a town of Spain, in New Castile, on the Júcar, 36 miles S. of Cuenca. It is a picturesque little place, with its old churches and bridges and relics of Moorish times. Pop. about 1000.

Alaro, à-là-ro, a town of Majorca, 12 miles NNE. of Palma.

Alaseya, à-là-sà'yà, a river in the NE. of Siberia, rises in lat. 67° N. and falls into the Arctic Ocean.

Ala-Shehr, à-là-shèh'r' (i.e., the "exalted city;" anc. Philadelphia), a walled town of Asia Minor, in the vilayet of Aidin, at the NE. base of Mount Tmolus, 83 miles by rail E. of Smyrna. Pop. about 20,000. It is the seat of a Greek archbishop and has numerous remains of antiquity.

Alas'ka (called Alaska by the Russians; a corruption of Al-ay-ek-sa, "great country," the name given by the native islanders to the mainland), a territory of the United States, forming the extreme northwestern part of the North American continent. It is bounded N. by the Arctic Ocean, E. by the Yukon district of Canada and British Columbia, S. by the Pacific Ocean, and W. by Bering Sea and Strait; the last, with a shortest width of 54 miles, separating it from the nearest point of Asia (Siberia). The territory includes St. Lawrence Island, the Pribilof and Aleutian Islands, Kadiak, and the islands of the Alexander Archipelago (Baranof, Chichagof, Prince of Wales) adjoining the coast of British Columbia down to lat. 54° 40' N., besides numerous smaller islands. The 141st meridian of W. longitude forms the boundary with British territory southward to within 10 marine leagues of the Pacific Ocean, the position of Mount St. Elias, whence the further boundary, adjusted by the decision of the Anglo-American Boundary Commission of Oct. 20, 1903, runs southeastward at approximately the same general distance from the sea. The most northern point of the territory is Point Barrow, in lat. 71° 23'; and the most western, Attu Island, one of the Aleutian chain, in lon. 187° 34' W. (172° 26' E.). The area is estimated to be approximately 570,000 sq. m.

Aspect of the Country.—Mountains.—The interior of Alaska, despite the numerous exploring parties that have entered during recent years, is still largely unknown, and it is as yet impossible to correlate the main features of its relief. Much of the great valley of the Yukon, which is in the form of a vast plain of but moderate elevation, is unquestionably of comparatively recent origin, dating from the Tertiary (Middle Miocene?) or Post-Tertiary period—a sedimented sea-bottom whose most salient features, as seen from the river, are the high levels, the summit-plain, over which the river formerly flowed. These rise in places 100–200 feet, or more, above the present level of the stream. The S. and SE. parts of Alaska are ruggedly mountainous, and in this section are found some of the loftiest summits of the continent (Crillon, Fairweather, Cook, Sanford and Tillman, all perhaps between 14,000 and 16,000 feet in height; St. Elias, 18,026 feet). The mountains in which these summits are found, and which in the main part of Alaska are sometimes called the Alaska Mountains (Alaska Alps), are apparently a continuation of the North American Coast Range, and not of the interior Rocky Mountains, which may or may not have their representation in some of the mountains (Romansof, Snow Range) lying N. of the Yukon. It is almost certain that the backbone of the Alaska Peninsula and the numerous islands of the Aleutian chain are the continuation of the southern Alaska Mountains, which have undergone severance and destruction. The relations of the central giants lying southward of the Tanana River and near the head-waters of the Shushitna are still unknown, but here is located what is seemingly the loftiest summit of the entire continent, Mount McKinley (the Russian Boleskaya), 20,464 feet.

The mountains of Alaska have a greatly depressed snow-line (1500–5000 feet), and from their vast snow-caps descend giant glaciers, many of them of Arctic proportions. Among the better known of these are the Muir Glacier, discharging into Glacier Bay, whose length is about 35 miles, and whose surface covers an area computed to be 350 sq. m.; Davidson and Taku Glaciers, and the giant Malaspina Glacier, fed by the snows of the St. Elias group of mountains—so far as is known the largest of all continental glaciers, and covering an area of 500–600 sq. m. The mountains at or near the head of Lynn Canal are crossed by a number of passes, of which the Chilkoot and White Passes have become historically famous through the gold movement of 1898–99. The latter is now traversed by a railway, connecting Skagway with the interior of Canada.

There are numerous active and extinct volcanoes in Alaska, and it becomes manifest from their broad distribution (in the far interior, the southern border, the islands of the Aleutian chain, and the borders of Norton Sound) that volcanic action had much to do with shaping the destinies of the surface. The breakages of the land, which have resulted in the disintegration of the Aleutian axis and in the separation at two or more points of the American continent from Siberia, can be associated with volcanic phenomena. Of the better known active or recently active cones are Wrangell, along the course of the Copper River (17,500 (?) feet high, and lately in eruption); Iliamna, on Cook Inlet (12,000 feet); Shishaldin, on Unimak Island (9000 feet?); and Makushin, on Unalaska.

Rivers.—The rivers of Alaska are large and numerous, taking tortuous courses, and affording communication with the heart of the interior. Of these, mention may be made of the Copper, Shushitna, and Kuskokwim, on the S.; the Yukon and its tributaries (Koryukuk, Tanana, Poropine), in the centre; the Noatak and Kowak on the W., and the Colville on the N. Many of these are navigable for light craft for long distances; but the waters are at places interrupted by shoals, shoals, and rapids, which make navigation difficult or discontinuous. The Yukon, one of the great rivers of the globe, has a course of 1500–1600 miles through the territory, descending in that distance about 1400 feet to the sea. It is navigable throughout this entire distance, and numerous steamers of light draught, patterned after the Mississippi model, ply regularly on it during the months of open navigation (June–September) between the mouth (or St. Michael) and Dawson. See YUKON.

There is as yet no controlled steamboat navigation on any of the other streams, which have hitherto been navigated or explored almost exclusively in the interests of gold-mining.

Climate, Agricultural Capabilities, Vegetation.—The climate is in the southern parts very much milder than that of corresponding latitudes on the E. coast of America. That of the Aleutian Islands is much like that of the Western Islands of Scotland. In the valley of the Yukon there are large fertile plains and extensive marshes, underlaid by a layer of ice which never melts, even in summer, when the surface is covered by a luxuriant vegetation. The summer on the Pacific coast, even in the far N., is generally warm, sunny, and pleasant, owing to the influence of the warm Kuroshio, the Gulf Stream of the Pacific, aided by the sunlight of the long Arctic day. On the Upper Yukon the summer heat is really intense, the mercury frequently registering 90°-95° (or even 100°) in the shade. The winter in the S. is by no means very cold. At Sitka, sound ice is never formed, and the winter temperature is only 35° (mean annual temperature, 45°). The rain-fall is copious, and foggy weather is common on the coasts and islands. At Sitka the yearly rain-fall is upward of 84 inches. The winters of the interior, on the other hand, are of Siberian severity, the temperature dropping to -60° and -70°. Despite this condition there is a comparatively early vegetation, and few of the north-temperate regions surpass southern and central Alaska in the luxuriance and brilliancy of their June and July verdure and in their floral display. Timber is abundant almost everywhere; but many of the islands and coast regions have few trees, and obtain their timber and fuel from the drift-wood which the rivers bring down. The white spruce affords strong, light, and durable spars. The noble yellow cedar is of unsurpassed excellence. Balsam fir and hemlock abound. The birch affords good timber. Poplars, willows, and alders are common, and they are still a part of the forest growth on the Arctic Circle. The aspen and larch continue the forest in places nearly to the 70th parallel of latitude. Edible berries are abundant, and of many kinds. Grass grows luxuriantly even in the far N. At Fort Yukon, N. of the Arctic Circle, barley, potatoes, cabbages, and turnips have been grown, and in lower regions of the far interior experimental and produce gardens of peas, lettuce, radishes, oats, and rye have proved moderately successful, giving hope for a more extended resource under more favorable conditions of cultivation. The total farm-wealth of Alaska was in June, 1900, only $15,686. Cattle have been introduced upon a number of the islands. Fish are abundant in both salt and fresh waters. The cod (not the true cod of the Atlantic), herrings, and a smelt called oulachan, abound; the latter affording a copious supply of oil. Many species of salmon are caught in the streams. Whitefish, much resembling those of the great lakes, are also abundant. Whale-fishing is carried on extensively in Bering Sea and the Arctic. Before the discovery of paying gold the principal revenue of this territory was derived from the fur trade. Fur-seals and sea-otters are taken, subject to regulations prescribed by the United States government to prevent the extinction of the species. The skins of the fox, mink, beaver, lynx, wolverine, bear, wolf, muskrat, and deer are also procured; but many of these animals, which at one time contributed largely to the fur industry, are now becoming rare or even verging on extinction. Despite the laws governing the seal-fishery, the present rate of destruction must soon lead to the extinction of the species, although there is not much opportunity of repeating the havoc of a few years past when upward of 4,000,000 fur-seals were killed in a period of five years.

Mineral Resources.—These are mainly coal and gold. Coal, of an inferior quality and of lignitic character (Eocene and Miocene), occurs in various parts of the territory from the Aleutian Islands and Alaska Peninsula to the Alexander Archipelago, the largest and most serviceable deposit being that of the Kenai Peninsula, on Cook Inlet. The coal of Cape Lisburne, on the NW. coast, is apparently of Carboniferous age. The vein deposits of gold, occurring in metamorphic slates, limestones, and granitoid rocks, have their centres of development in the coast region (Juneau, Douglas Island) adjoining British Columbia, and in Ungava Island. The famous Treadwell Mine, on Douglas Island, carrying an exceedingly low-grade ore, has yielded a product of many millions of dollars. Placer gold is mined in numerous districts of the interior, most of which are contiguous to the Yukon (Forty-Mile Creek, Birch Creek, Minook, Tanana); but nowhere has the product up till now given evidence of the riches that distinguish the Klondike placers. Yet it would appear almost certain that the gold-belt of the Yukon district is carried through the heart of Alaska, a view that is seemingly sustained by the discovery, in 1898-99, of the rich placers and beach-sands gold of the Prince of Wales or Seward Peninsula, at Nome, Anvil, Golovin Bay, and other localities. Some of the claims on Anvil Creek rival in riches the best locations of the Eldorado-Bonanza district of the Klondike, while the seashore sands have yielded several million dollars' worth of gold. The Alaska gold product was in 1903 $8,614,700.

The Native Races are partly of Innuut or Eskimo stock and partly of the red Indian race. The Aleuts appear to be a branch of the Innuut, and there are tribes of mixed origin. The Indians are of two great families, each of which comprises several tribes or bands. The Thlinket race is the one most peculiar to Alaska; for the great Tinneh family extends southward and appears to include the Apaches, Comanches, and other far-distant tribes.

History.—Vitus Bering, an officer in the Russian service, in 1728 sailed into the Arctic Sea; but he never saw this coast until his second voyage of discovery, in 1741, just before his death. The region became a field for Russian maritime adventure and trade, and the pioneers were guilty of many enormities among the peaceable islanders. In 1778, Captain Cook, with Vancouver, Ledyard, Bligh, and other distinguished subordinates, visited these shores. The first Russian bishop was appointed in 1796, and the Russian-American Company chartered in 1799, shortly after which Sitka (New Archangel) was founded by Baranof, who had long ruled in these regions.

In 1867 the territory called Russian America was purchased by the United States from Russia for $7,200,000 in gold. The capital is Sitka, on Baranof Island. The United States census for 1900 gives a total population for the territory of 63,692, of whom 29,536 were Indians, 3116 Chinese, 265 Japanese, and 168 negro. The territory is unorganised, and the governor and his assistants are appointed by the president of the United States.

Alaska, a post-village of Owen co., Ind., about 35 miles SW. of Indianapolis. Pop. about 200.

Alaska, a post-village of Kent co., Mich., on Thornapple River, 14 miles SE. of Grand Rapids. Pop. about 200.

Alaska, a post-village of Mineral co., W. Va., 10 miles S. of Cumberland, Md. Pop. about 160.

Alaska, a post-village of Keweenaw co., Wis., on Lake Michigan, 110 miles N. by E. of Milwaukee.

Alaska Mountains, a chain of mountains in Alaska, trending southwestward from the region of the Upper Tanana, and seemingly standing in relation with the parallel mountain backbone of the Alaska Peninsula. Little is known regarding its construction or its connection with the coast mountains of the SE.

Alaska Peninsula, the narrow SW. prolongation of Alaska, stretching from Iliamna Lake to Unimak Island (lon. 163° 30' W.). It was formerly called Atiaska, to distinguish it from Alaska proper. Geographically it is a unit with the Aleutian Islands, and is apparently the SW. extension of the rough volcanic mountain-chain W. of Cook Inlet; parts of the chain are still active. The peninsula is in large part tundra. Coal has been found in several localities.

Alasio, à-là-se-o, a seaport town of Italy, in the province of Genoa, on the Mediterranean, 4 miles SW. of Albenga. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 4689.

Ala-Tagh, a mountain of Turkey. See ALA-DAGH.

Ala-Tau, à-là-tōw (i.e., "mottled mountains"), a name of Chinese origin, applied to several mountain-ranges of central Asia, one of which, the Dzungarian Ala-Tau, is about lat. 46° N. and lon. 80° E., forms the boundary between Dzungaria and the Russian government of Semiretchensk. Its highest summits rise to about 11,500 feet. This range is frequently designated the Cis-Ili Ala-Tau to distinguish it from the Trans-Ili Ala-Tau, which in two main branches, the northern or Kungei Ala-Tau and the southern or Tereskei Ala-Tau, skirts the opposite banks of Lake Issyk-Kul. Taigarnyn, the loftiest summit, attains an elevation of 15,350 feet. A western projection of these mountains is now known as the Alexander Range. The name Ala-Tau is also given to an Alpine tract, related to the true Altai system, which follows a part of the boundary between the Russian governments of Tomsk and Yeniseisk, in Siberia.

Alatri, à-là-tree (anc. Alatrium), a town of Italy, a bishop's see, 6 miles N. of Frosinone. Pop. in 1901, 6523; of the commune, 15,322. It has manufactures of woollen goods. The place is of high antiquity, its walls exhibiting remains of cyclopean architecture.

Extreme length, about 290 miles; breadth, from 40 to 100 miles. It borders on the W. and SW. on the Adriatic and Ionian seas, and extends eastward to the Shar-Dagh and other mountains that form the western water-shed of Macedonia. It stretches from Montenegro and Novi-Pazar in the N. to Greece on the S. It is composed of ridges of mountains, nearly all of which have a direction NW. and SE. The principal heights vary from about 2500 to 8500 feet above the sea. Albania has no great rivers, the longest being the Drin and the Voyussa. It partakes of the peculiar system of subterranean streams that characterizes Greece. Epirus, in the extreme S., is especially remarkable for its circular basins, its oavities without water, its ponds and water-courses that disappear at certain seasons. There are several considerable lakes, among them Ohkrida, Scutari, and Janina. The region produces maize, wheat, rice, tobacco, and olives, and yields valuable timber. The chief towns in the interior are Prirend and Janina, and the principal seaports are Scutari, Durazzo, Avlona, and Prevesa. The exports are shipped chiefly at Prevesa, Parga, Avlona, Durazzo, etc. Albania is under the government of different Turkish pashas. The Albanians speak a language of their own, which is not clearly allied to any other known tongue, but is regarded as of the Indo-European stock. In the N. is spoken the Ghegh dialect, in the S. the Tosk. The Albanians are a warlike race, much given to robbery and brigandage. The great majority are Moslems; but there are large numbers belonging to the Ort'odox Greek and Roman Catholic churches. The population of Albania is estimated at from 1,200,000 to 1,660,000. Besides the Albanians there are large bodies of Turks, Serbs, Rumanas, and Greeks. In addition to their own country, the Albanians are found in large numbers in the adjoining parts of Turkey, in Greece, Italy, and Sicily. The Albanians offered a heroic resistance to the Turks in the fifteenth century under the famous Scanderbeg (Castriota), but soon after his death (1468) the subjugation of the country was completed.—Adj. and inhab. ALBANIAN, ál-bá-ne-án; Turk., ARNAUT, ár'ná-oot'; native, SHKIP'ETAR.

Albany, a city, capital of the state of New York (since 1797) and of Albany co., on the W. bank of the Hudson River, in lat.  $42^{\circ} 39' 3''$  N., lon.  $73^{\circ} 45' W.$ , 142 miles N. of New York, and at the junction of the New York Central and Hudson River, the Boston and Albany, the Delaware and Hudson and the West Shore Rs. This position, together with the fact that the river, which is crossed by 3 railroad and road bridges, connects here with the great lakes by the Erie Canal, and with Lake Champlain by the Champlain Canal, gives Albany great advantages as a receiving and distributing point, especially for grain and lumber, and makes it an important centre of the western trade. Several lines of steamers connect Albany with New York and with points on the Hudson River. The city is well built, with some very fine streets and beautifully finished parks (Washington Park) and boulevards. Leading industries on a large scale, besides printing and book-making, are the manufacture of stoves and other metal goods, wagons, farming implements, clothing of every description, boots and shoes, beer and ale, pianos, cardboard, glazed and colored papers, papermakers' felt, and some others. Prominent buildings are the state capitol, which was begun in 1871, and virtually completed in 1898, at a total cost of upward of \$25,000,000; the state hall, state normal college, state armory, natural history museum, county prison, masonic temple, city buildings, the federal building, the new hospital (1899), and the All Saints' Cathedral. Among other institutions may be named the Dudley Observatory and the medical, pharmaceutical, and law schools, affiliated, since 1871, with Union College, Schenectady, under the title of Union University; and Albany Institute. A public reading library of over 350,000 volumes is maintained by the state. Albany is the seat of a Roman Catholic and of a Protestant Episcopal bishop. Electric railways run to every part of the town and to Troy, West Troy, West Albany, Kenwood, Greenbush, and other suburbs. The place was formerly known as Fort Orange, Beverwyck, and Williamstadt. It was settled in 1540 by Frenchmen, who began building a castle, which was completed by Dutchmen in 1614 and called Fort Nassau. The city is the oldest existing European settlement in the thirteen original states. Walloons from Holland settled here in 1624 and erected Fort Orange. The place was surrendered to the English, Sept. 24, 1664, and named Albany, in honor of the Duke of York and Albany, afterwards James II. It was chartered a city in 1686. Alep'po, called by the natives (Arabs) Haleb, or Haleb es-Shabba, há'léb & sháb'bá (anc. Chal'lyben and Bere'a), a city of Asiatic Turkey, in northern Syria, capital of a vilayet, long one of the principal emporiums of the Ottoman Empire, on the Kuweik (anc. Chal'us), 70 miles E. of the Mediterranean. Lat. 36° 11' N.; lon. 37° 10' E. Pop. estimated at 125,000; but previous to the earthquake of 1822 it is said to have been upward of 200,000. The city rose to importance on the destruction of Palmyra, and became the great emporium of trade between Europe and the East. Its appearance, on approaching it, is striking and picturesque. Numerous mosques, cupolas, and minarets crowd on the eye; the flat roofs of the houses on the hills rise, one behind another, in a succession of terraces. But on entering the gates much of this pleasing illusion is dispelled, the streets, although well paved and cleaned for an Oriental city, offering little attraction to the eye. The houses, however, are substantially built of blocks of stone, with spacious apartments, many of which have richly ornamented walls and ceilings. In the centre of the city rises a hill 200 feet high, commonly thought to be artificial, the top of which is crowned by a citadel. An abundant supply of water is furnished from springs, about 8 miles distant, by an ancient aqueduct. The banks of the Kuweik form a beautiful garden, extending for a long distance outside of the city. Aleppo is the seat of four Catholic archbishops of different rites, as well as of Greek and Armenian prelates, the Christians comprising about one-sixth of the population. The Jewish community, numbering about 5000, is important and prosperous. Silks, cottons, gold and silver threadstuffs, soap, and leather goods are manufactured. The extensive trade of Aleppo is mainly in the hands of Greeks and Armenians. Large caravans arrive from Bagdad, Diarbekr, Mosul, Kurdistan, and Armenia.

Aleppo, a vilayet (province) of Asiatic Turkey, extending from the Mediterranean to beyond the Euphrates, and comprising northern Syria and part of Mesopotamia. Area, about 30,000 sq. m. Aletschhorn, after the Finsteraarhorn, the loftiest summit of the Bernese Alps, situated S. of the Jungfrau. Altitude, 13,720 feet. It was first ascended by Tuckett in 1859.

Aleutian, or Aliutian (a-lu-shan) Islands, or Catherina Archipelago, a long chain of islands belonging to the United States, in Alaska Territory, extending from the peninsula of Alaska westward towards Kamchatka, and dividing the Sea of Kamchatka, or Bering Sea, from the Pacific Ocean. They lie in both hemispheres, and extend from about lon. 163° to 188° W. (172° E.), the westernmost of the United States islands being Attu; for the Commander group, to the westward, is Russian, and is not generally regarded as a part of this chain. The Aleutians proper are about 150 in number, and are divided into the Nearer, Rat, Andreanof, Fox, and other groups: they are generally mountainous, and often volcanic. Shishaldin, on Unimak, is 8683 feet high, and Makushin, on Unalaska, 5961 feet; both mountains are volcanoes, which have been in activity in recent periods. The erratic Bogoslof lies NW. of Unalaska. (See BOGOSLOF.) The islands are treeless, but support a fairly rich growth of grasses and dwarf shrubs. Agriculture, owing to the inclement, but not severe, climate, has made little headway. The people, Aleuts, are an inoffensive race, apparently allied in stock to the Eskimos, and are members of the Greek Church. Pop. about 2000. The principal islands are Unalaska and Unimak.

Al'examdret'ta (Turk. Iskanderun, is'kân-de-roon'), a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, picturesquely situated on the Gulf of Iskanderun, the extreme northeastern arm of the Mediterranean. It has a large commerce, much of the trade of Aleppo and northern Syria passing through it. Pop. estimated at about 7000. The town is the ancient Alexandria ad Iesus.

Alexan'dria (Gr. Ἀλεξάνδρεια; Arab. and Turk. Iskanderi'ye; named from Alexander the Great), a seaport of Egypt, near the westernmost branch of the Nile delta, on the Mediterranean, 112 miles NW. of Cairo, with which it communicates by the Mahmediyeh Canal (joining the Rosetta arm) and the Nile and by railway. Another railway connects it with Rosetta. Lat. of Pharos, 31° 12' 9" N.; lon. 29° 53' E. The modern city is built on a peninsula (anciently the island of Pharos), and on the isthmus connecting it with the continent; the ancient city, of which but few of the constructions can now be identified, was on the mainland, where its ruins cover a vast extent. Alexandria has a palace of the khedive, a large naval arsenal, naval and military schools and hospitals, a College of Lasarists, tribunal of commerce, etc.; it is the station of the Egyptian fleet, and the port is cleared and entered annually by upward of 2600 steamers, more than one-half of which are under the English flag. Alexandria in the new streets and squares has more the aspect of a European than of an African or Asiatic city. Among the notable objects are the ancient Pompey's Pillar, the palace of Ras et-Tin (built by Mehemet Ali), and the Museum of Græco-Roman Antiquities. The great centre of European life is the Place Mehemet Ali. Country-houses line a part of the ancient canal leading to the W. arm of the Nile, which was restored by Mehemet Ali. The city has an excellent double harbor, formed by a breakwater (2 miles in length), mole, and quays. Alexandria is the great emporium of Egypt. The principal exports are corn, cotton, wool, gums, rice, dates, sugar, cotton-seed, wheat, senna, and hides. It has regular steam communication with the principal European ports, and is the seat of several large government and other manufactories in which steam is the motive power. Alexandria was founded in the year 332 B.C. Under the Ptolemies it rose to great distinction for its learning, commerce, wealth, and literature. Even after its subjection to the Roman Empire it was considered second only to Rome. Its library, founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus, surpassed all others of antiquity, numbering 700,000 volumes. Under Mohammedan rule the city fell into decay. Its population, once 600,000 souls, is said to have numbered in the eighteenth century only 6000; but under Mehemet Ali (1805-48) it once more became a flourishing city. It was partially destroyed during the uprising of Arabi Pasha in 1882. Pop. in 1872, 212,034 (47,316 foreigners); in 1882, 227,044, of whom 48,672 were foreigners; and in 1902, 310,587, of which number about 100,000 were located in the Moslem quarter. Algarve, ál-gar-vá, or Algar'bia, the southernmost province of Portugal, formerly a kingdom of the same name, conquered by Alfonso III. in 1251. Area, 1872 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 254,351. It borders on the S. and W. on the Atlantic. On its N. frontier is the Serra de Monchique, ramifications of which cover most of its surface. In the S. are plains yielding tropical and subtropical products. Some wine is grown, also corn and forage. The exports are dried fruits, oranges, salt, and fish. Chief towns, Tavira, Faro, and Lagos. The inhabitants of Algarve have long been noted as seamen. The province now constitutes the district of Faro.

Algotocin, ál-gá-to-theen, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 46 miles W. by S. of Malaga. Pop. (commune) 1500.

Algäu, Allgäu, ál-göy, or Algau, ál-gow, a term applied somewhat vaguely to a region including part of Upper Swabia, lying near the lake of Constance, in Württemberg and Bavaria, and also a small part of the Vorarlberg, in Austria. Here lie the Algäuer-Alpen (Alps of Algäu), a northern prolongation of the Rhetian Alps. They have the river Lech on the E., the Rhine on the W., and decline northward into the Swabian plateau. The highest peaks are in Austrian territory.

Algeria, ál-jee-re-á (Fr. Algérie, ál-shá'ree), a French colonial possession on the N. coast of Africa, having the Mediterranean on the N., Tunis on the E., and Morocco on the W.; its southern boundaries, extending far into the Sahara, are as yet undefined. Estimated area, as comprised in the three departments of Algiers, Constantine, and Oran, and therefore exclusive of the region of the Sahara, 176,500 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 4,774,042. The Algerian Sahara may add a further 50,000 to the population. The coast, which has an extent of over 650 miles, is deficient in good natural harbors. The surface of the country presents a varied aspect of fertile mountain tracts and valleys, high and partially barren plateaus, rugged mountains, and unwatered desert sands. The chief mountains are those of the Little Atlas and Jurjura, following in a line not very far from the coast and culminating in the Lalla-Khadidja (or Khedridja), about 7650 feet high; and the Great Atlas, which forms the great bulwark on the confines of the Sahara, and in the Aurès section, in Mount Chellia, attains an elevation of 7700 feet. (See ATLAS MOUNTAINS.) The wildly mountainous region known as the Kabylia is mainly comprised in the spur of the Jurjura. The natural divisions of the country are: 1, the Tell, a strip of undulating and largely cultivated land, including the forest-covered outer or Little Atlas, and extending to a distance of 50-150 miles from the coast; 2, the vast plateau tract following interior to this, standing at an elevation of 3000-4000 feet above the sea, and cultivable only in limited areas of irrigation (although supporting extensive growths of esparto or halfa grass, and giving good pasturage to vast numbers of sheep and goats); and 3, the Sahara, with its northern confine of grand mountains, the Great Atlas. A remarkable feature of the desert, shared also by the coast-plains and by parts of the great plateau, is the presence of Skotts or Sebkha, saline marshes or brackish lakes, some of which are charged with salt quite to saturation, and give to the eye the appearance of snow- or ice-sheets. The Shott Melrhir (Meighir), which lies in the Sahara SE. of the oasis of Biskra, and receives as affluents the Jodi in the N. and the Igharghar on the S., is depressed 70 feet or more below the level of the Mediterranean, with which it appears formerly to have had a connection at the Gulf of Gabes. (See SAHARA.) In the desert there are many fertile oases, especially near the mountains, producing dates and other fruit, grain, pasturage, and some cotton. The best known among these is Biskra, a military post and health-resort, with a growth of palms (date) numbering not less than 200,000 trees. Others are the advanced military post Wargla, or Ouargla, and the Arab town Tuggurt, near which are some of the largest dunes of the Sahara, measuring 1000 feet or more in height.

The rivers are small, and serviceable chiefly for irrigation, those of the S. being dry in summer; and none of the Saharian streams reach the sea. Towards the coast are many lakes and marshes, some of which have been drained off late, to the great improvement of the public health. The climate is variable. The summers are in part intensely hot, the temperature, even outside of the region of the Sahara, ranging in the course of the simoom to 115° (shade). In the city of Algiers, which has an average annual temperature of 66°, the range of the thermometer is from about 35° (lowest in winter) to 105°. There is little or no rain during the summer season, but exceptionally rain-storms occur with great fury in the months of August and September. Algeria has perhaps the most delightful winter climate on the Mediterranean, and it is rapidly becoming a winter health- and tourist-resort. Snow covers the higher mountains until May or June, but there is no perpetual snow- or ice-cap. The glaciers of the Jurjura that have from time to time been reported do not exist.

The flora of Algeria contains a number of tropical elements, but is essentially of the Mediterranean type, and, like much of the fauna, of a distinctly south European relationship. Among some of its more prevalent or distinctive forms may be mentioned the myrtles, cork-oak, oleander and cedar (Jurjura), the aloe, and date-palm.

The mineral productions include iron-ore of excellent quality, argentiferous lead-ore, copper, antimony, zinc, mercury, various marbles, and phosphates. Considerable capital is invested in mining. Thermal and mineral springs abound. Fish, fine sponges, and red coral are extensively procured on the coast. Among the wild animals are the lion, leopard, hyena, fox, jackal, ape, gazelle, sheep (aouda), and numerous smaller mammals. Venomous serpents abound. Many sheep, horses, and camels are bred, and the ostrich is reared to some extent for its plumes. Halfa, cork, timber, dates, palmetto-fibre, and henna are among the important native products. Wheat, barley, wool, oil-seeds, jujubes, oil, opium, sugar, cotton, flax, silk, hides, and tobacco are produced, and some of them are largely exported. The culture of fruits (figs, oranges, lemons, olives, and dates) is rapidly gaining in importance; the Algerian (Oran) grape is of excellent quality.

The native races of Algeria include the Kabyles (Berbers), who speak their own language, are mostly agriculturists and non-nomadic, and are sometimes regarded as descendants of the ancient Numidians; and the Arabs, somewhat more numerous than the Kabyles, and speaking the Arabic with more or less purity. There are also considerable numbers of Moors, Jews, and negroes. All the natives, except the Jews, are of the Moslem faith.

Algeria is divided into three departments,—Algiers (Algier), Oran, and Constantine,—formed on the model of the departments of France and governed by a civil governor-general, each department (represented in the French National Assembly by 1 senator and 2 deputies) being divided into civil districts with French justices, and military territories with indigenous Arab justices appointed by the French military government. By a decree of Dec. 24, 1902, the "Territories of the South" were constituted under a separate administration. The original European colonists were mostly French, and in 1901, of the total population of 4,774,042, there were 364,257 of French origin or naturalisation, 219,587 other Europeans, and upward of 56,000 naturalised Jews. Notwithstanding the turbulent character of the native people and the severe nature of the French administration, it may be doubted whether the country was ever before so prosperous as at present, except while under the Roman authority. At that time it was one of the granaries of the world.

The region now called Algeria was in antiquity included in Numidia and eastern Mauretania, which passed under Roman rule in the first century B.C. and the following century. After the fall of Rome, the country was successively subject to Vandal, Byzantine, Saracen, Kabyle, and Moorish sway. The expulsion of the Moors from Spain was the cause of the great extension of Algerine piracy. In the sixteenth century Algiers acknowledged the supremacy of the Turkish sultan. At the close of the century the office of Dey (to share the authority with the Turkish pasha) was created, and at the end of little more than a hundred years the Dey shook off the authority of the sultan, the country thus becoming completely independent. Piracy and Christian slavery were important sources of public and private revenue, and the home government was a cruel despotism. In 1815 the United States navy chastised the Algerines and compelled them to declare the American flag inviolable. In 1816 the British bombarded Algiers, and put an end to Christian slavery. In 1830 the French undertook the conquest of the country. This, however, was only accomplished after many years of bloody war. In 1847 Abd-el-Kader, who for 15 years had been the principal native leader, was made a prisoner. The Kabyles, and especially the Arabs, frequently revolted, and their native valor was much stimulated by hatred for an alien race and by religious prejudices. The last revolt took place in 1881. Immigration is slow, and the expenses to France are much greater than the revenues.—Adj. and inhab. ALGERIENS, Al-jer-reen' (Fr. ALGÉRIEN, Al-sha'ráw').

Algiete, Al-ná'tá, a town of Spain, province of Madrid, near the river Jarama. Pop. (commune) 1200.

Alghero, Al-gá'ro, a seaport of Sardinia, on the W. coast, 14 miles SW. of Sassari. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 11,337. It exports wine, grain, wool, skins, anchovies, coral, etc. Not far from the town, on the coast, are the wonderful Neptune grottoes.

Algiers, one of the three departments into which the French possession of Algeria is divided, is bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the department of Constantine, and W. by the department of Oran. The oasis of Ouargla in the desert of Sahara is sometimes taken to mark its southern limit. It has a coast-line on the Mediterranean of about 230 miles, with but few good harbors. Capital, Algiers. Area, 64,529 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 1,640,985.

Algiers, Al-jer' (Arab. Al-Jasair, Al-já-sair'; Fr. Algier, Al'shain'), capital of the French colony of Algeria and of the department of Algiers, on the W. side of a bay of its own name, on the Mediterranean. Lat. 36° 47' 3" N.; lon. 3° 4' 5" E. It is built on the north slope of Mount Bousarea, which rises in its highest point about 1800 feet above the bay, and is surmounted at about 400 feet by the citadelle or kasba. The houses are arranged amphitheatrically. The external aspect of the city is exceedingly imposing. Since the French occupation it has been transformed from an Oriental town to a place of even more modern aspect than many European cities exhibit, having wide streets and boulevards (Boulevard de la République), fine open squares (Place de la République) and gardens, and splendid public buildings, among which are the palaces of the government and of the archbishop, the public library (with 33,000 volumes) and museum of antiquities, the grand mosque (El-Kebir), and the great military and defensive works. The city is connected by railway with Oran, Constantine, Biskra, and Tunis; has an academy (university), medical and military colleges, observatory, meteorological institution, natural history museum, acclimation garden, 22 mosques, etc. A considerable quarter, known as the old town, still retains many Oriental characteristics. It has numerous fountains, supplying an abundance of water from the aqueducts and reservoirs above the town. Algiers is the residence of the governor-general and all the leading officers of the Algerine colony. The harbor is a work of immense labor, first formed by Barbarossa about 1530, having a mole 580 feet in length by 140 in width, extending from the mainland to an islet, on which are a strong castle, with batteries, and a light-house. Three long jetties have been added by the French, and there are grand quays and docks for shipping. The commerce of Algiers has risen to great importance, and its exports of vegetables, fruits, grain, oil, leather, leaf tobacco, wine, sheep, and wool are directed to France, England, Spain, Italy, Portugal, and Belgium. Owing to its mild winter climate (January mean temperature, 54°), the city has become a popular resort with both tourists and invalids. The heights of Mustapha Supérieur are crowned with beautiful gardens and villas. Pop. in 1901, 96,542.

Pop. in 1900, 2607.

Alleghany, a county in the NW. part of Maryland. It is bounded on the S. by the Potomac River and its North Branch. The main Alleghany Mountains traverse this county, the surface of which is also diversified by other high ridges. Here occur broad fertile valleys called glades, which are adapted to pasture and supply superior butter and mutton. Among the mineral resources are bituminous coal, iron-ore, limestone, and sandstone. Area, 442 sq. m. Capital, Cumberland. Pop. in 1890, 41,571; in 1900, 53,694.

Alleghany, a county in the SW. part of New York, bordering on Pennsylvania, has an area of 1018 sq. m. It is intersected by the Genesee River, which runs northward, and is also drained by the Canisteo River and Angelica and Canaseraga Creeks. There are good sandstones, some of which are used for building-stones and grindstones. Capital, Belmont. Pop. in 1890, 43,240; in 1900, 41,501.

Alleghany, a banking post-village of Cattaraugus co., N.Y., on the Erie and the Western New York and Pennsylvania R., 60 miles ESE. of Dunkirk. It has canning, butter- and cheese-factories. Pop. of the township (town) in 1900, 3692.

Alleghany, al-lê-gâ'née, a river of the United States, a branch of the Ohio, rises in Potter co., Pa., and, turning northward, makes an extensive détour in Cattaraugus co., N.Y. Having re-crossed the northern boundary of Pennsylvania, it runs southwestward through the oil region to Franklin, Venango co. From this point it flows southeastward to the mouth of Mahoning Creek, below which it pursues a southwest course through Armstrong and Allegheny cos. until it unites with the Monongahela at Pittsburgh. The stream formed by this confluence is the Ohio River. The length of the Alleghany is perhaps 350 miles. Small steamboats can ascend it 200 miles or more from Pittsburgh. This river traverses a hilly country, in which bituminous coal, petroleum, and pine timber are abundant.

Alleghany, a county in the NW. part of North Carolina, has an area of 223 sq. m. It is drained by the New River. The surface is mountainous. The Blue Ridge extends along the SE. border of the county. Gold and copper are mined. Capital, Sparta. Pop. in 1890, 6523; in 1900, 7759.

Alleghany, a county of Virginia, has an area of 452 sq. m. It is intersected by Jackson's River, a branch of the James River. On the E. border of the county the Cowpasture and Jackson's Rivers unite to form the James. The surface is diversified by mountains and fertile valleys, and the main ridge of the Alleghany Mountains extends along the NW. border. The Red Sweet Springs are in this county. Various deposits of iron-ore are found here. Capital, Covington. Pop. in 1890, 9283; in 1900, 16,330.

Alleghany, a post-village and mining-camp of Sierra co., Cal., on Kanaka Creek, about 60 miles ENE. of Marysville. Pop. 150.

Alleghany Mountains, a term of various application, sometimes used as synonymous with the Appalachian System (see APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS), but by some writers applied to that portion of the system which is comprised in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and North Carolina, and which forms the water-shed between the Atlantic and the Mississippi River. In a more restricted sense the Alleghanies include the mountain-ridges of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, except the Kittatinny and South Mountains in Pennsylvania and the Blue Ridge in Virginia. These ridges, with an elevation generally of 2000-3000 feet, and perhaps nowhere exceeding 3500 feet, are remarkable for their parallelism, regularity, rectilinear direction, and evenness of outline, there being few clearly marked out or dominating peaks. Their general direction is nearly parallel with the Atlantic coast. They are composed in the main of stratified rocks of the Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous ages, disposed in regularly following anticlinal and synclinal folds. A number of the larger streams tributary to the Atlantic traverse the mountains in deeply-incised transverse gapes. The mountains are rich in coal and iron deposits, and limestone is an abundant constituent of both the ridges and the valley-floors. Among the valuable forest trees which abound on them are the beech, ash, white oak, chestnut, hickory, white pine, and wild cherry.

* It is much to be desired that a uniform orthography of this name should be adopted. In New York it is commonly written Allegheny, in Pennsylvania, Alleghens, and in Virginia and the Southern States, Alleghany, though nearly all of the works on general geography, even those published in New York and Pennsylvania, spell the name ALLEGHANY. The impropriety, not to say absurdity, of this discrepancy in the spelling of this name will be seen by referring to a representation of New York and Pennsylvania on the same map. We shall there find at times one and the same river named Allegheny near its source, while lower down, for the distance of some 40 or 50 miles, it is Alleghany, and then again Allegheny for the rest of its course. In this work the river and mountains will be referred to as Alleghany, while the counties and towns will be found under their official state designations (Alleghany in New York and Maryland, Allegheny in Pennsylvania, and Alleghany in Virginia and North Carolina).

Alleghany Plateau, a term used by physiographers to designate the more westerly parts of the Atlantic highlands of the United States, or that portion of "Appalachia" in which the constructing strata occupy a nearly horizontal position. Much of the region is densely forested and drains to the Ohio River. It abounds in bituminous coal, in petroleum, and natural gas. The region extends from the heart of New York (S. of the Mohawk) to northern Alabama, and westward into Ohio and Kentucky. Among its best-known parts are the Catskill Mountains (4200 feet) of New York, the Pocono Mountain of Pennsylvania, and the Cumberland Plateau, or Table-land, of East Tennessee.

Alleghany Spring, a post-station and resort of Montgomery co., Va., 80 miles W. by S. of Lynchburg and 3 miles from Alleghany Station, which is on the Norfolk and Western R., 77 miles W. of Lynchburg. The springs afford a highly useful saline water, and are much visited in summer. The scenery here is very fine.

Alleghany Station, a post-village of Alleghany co., Va., 5 miles E. of White Sulphur Springs. Pop. 76.

Allegheny, a county in the W. part of Pennsylvania, has an area of 758 sq. m. The Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers unite near the middle of the county and form the Ohio, which traverses the NW. part. It is also drained by the Youghiogheny River and Chartiers and Turtle Creeks. There are extensive deposits of coal, petroleum, and natural gas, which give cheap fuel and illuminating power, and add materially to the manufacture of iron and steel. Capital, Pittsburgh. Pop. in 1890, 551,959; in 1900, 775,058.

Allegheny, a city of Allegheny co., Pa., on the Allegheny River, opposite Pittsburgh, with which it is connected by several handsome bridges. It is on the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio and other railroads. It has many fine residences, numerous and extensive iron- and steel-works, including rolling-mills, locomotive- and machine-shops, and foundries, also cotton- and woollen-mills, and manufactories of leather, paints, cigars, flour, beer, salt, etc. Allegheny is the seat of the Western Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church, established in 1827; the Theological Seminary of the United Presbyterians, established in 1826, and the Allegheny Theological Seminary (Reformed Presbyterian), organised in 1840. There is also the Western University of Pennsylvania, first established in Pittsburgh in 1819, but removed to its fine edifices in this city about 1888; and here is the Allegheny Astronomical Observatory, famed for its original work and discoveries in solar physics. Other institutions of note are the Carnegie Free Library (containing, in 1901, 42,000 volumes), with its music hall and art gallery, the "Riverside Penitentiary" (late the Western), located on the bank of the Ohio, a house of industry, widow's home, etc. Allegheny has a central park containing 100 acres. Pop. in 1860, 28,702; in 1890, 105,287; in 1900, 129,896.

Alpes-Maritimes, alp'má'ree'teem', the southeasternmost department of France. Area, 1442 sq. m. On the N. and E. ranges of the Alps divide it from Italy; on the S. it is bounded by the Mediterranean. It is one of the most picturesque regions in France, and has a mild and agreeable climate. Among the well-known health-resorts of the department, which surrounds landward the principality of Monaco, are Nice (the capital), Cannes, Antibes, and Mentone. The olive, orange, lemon, mulberry, citron, and vine flourish here, and the cultivation of flowers for perfumers' use is a leading industry. Grain, timber, tobacco, silk, honey, wax, and oil are produced. Copper, lignite, manganese, and lead are mined. Pop. in 1901, 239,213.

Al'pha, a post-hamlet of Yell co., Ark., 10 miles N. of Danville.

Alpha, a banking post-village of Henry co., Ill., on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R., 26 miles NNE. of Momouth. Pop. in 1900, 355.

Alpha, a post-hamlet of Scott co., Ind., about 20 miles WNW. of Madison.

Alpha, a post-village of Fayette co., Iowa.

Alpha, a post-village of Natchitoches parish, La., about 18 miles N. of Natchitoches, its banking point.

Alpha, a post-village of Howard co., Md., 8 miles (direct) NW. by W. of Bellicott City. Pop. about 500.

Alpha, a post-village of Jackson co., Minn., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. Pop. in 1900, 209.

Alpha, a post-town of Grundy co., Mo., 16 miles NNE. of Chillicothe. Pop. in 1900, 45.

Alpha, a post-village of Greene co., Ohio, on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis R., 10 miles ESE. of Dayton. Pop. about 360.

Alpha, a post-village of Dallas co., Tex.

Alpharet'ta, a post-town, capital of Milton co., Ga., about 27 miles N. of Atlanta and 27 miles NE. of Roswell. Pop. in 1900, 310.

Alphen, al'fen, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, on the Rhine, 7 miles E. of Leyden. Pop. (commune) about 5000.

Alphen-em-Riel, al'fen-en-reel, a village of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, 11 miles SE. of Breda.

Alpheus, a river of Greece. See RUPHIA.

Alphington, a suburb of Melbourne, Australia. Pop. about 1100.

Alphonse (al'fon') Islands, two small islands, surrounded by extensive reefs, situated in the Indian Ocean. The N. point is in lat. 6° 59' S., lon. 52° 41' E.

Alphoretta, a post-village of Floyd co., Ky. Pop. about 75.

Alphubel, alp'hoo-b'l, a mountain of Switzerland, of the Mischabel group, between the Mattervisp and the Saaservisp. Height, 13,803 feet. The Alphubel-Joch, between the Alphubel and the Melihohenhorn, has an elevation of 12,475 feet.

Alpignano, al-peen-yá'no, a town of Italy, province of Turin. Pop. about 2000.

Alpika, a post-village of De Soto co., Miss., on the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley R., 13 miles (direct) S. by W. of Memphis. Pop. about 150.

Alpine, al'peen or al'pin, a county of California, bordering on Nevada, has an area of 710 sq. m. It is drained by the Stanislaus and Mokelumne Rivers, which rise within its limits. This county comprises several peaks of the Sierra Nevada, one of which, called Silver Mountain, rises nearly 11,000 feet above the sea-level. Silver-mines have been opened in this county, which contains abundance of granite and quartz. Capital, Markleeville. Pop. in 1890, 667; in 1900, 569.

Al'pine, a post-village of Talladega co., Ala., 99 miles by rail NNE. of Selma.

Alpine, a post-hamlet of Apache co., Ariz. Pop. 50.

Alpine, a post-village of Clark co., Ark., 80 miles WSW. of Little Rock.

Alpine, a post-village of San Diego co., Cal., about 29 miles NE. of San Diego. Pop. about 300.

Alpine, a post-village of Chaffee co., Colo., on a branch of the Union Pacific R., 52 miles NE. of Gunnison. It is situated at an elevation of 9245 feet. A few miles from here is the Alpine Tunnel, 590 yards in length, and one of the loftiest pieces of railroad engineering in the world. Height, 11,660 feet.

Alpine, a hamlet of Chattooga co., Ga., 44 miles S. by W. of Chattanooga.

Alpine, a post-hamlet of Cook co., Ill. Pop. about 50.

Alpine, a post-village of Fayette co., Ind., on the White-water River, 19 miles by rail S. of Cambridge City.

Alpine, a post-village of Kent co., Mich., 8 miles by rail NNW. of Grand Rapids. Pop. of the township in 1900, 1471.

Alpine, a post-village of Bergen co., N.J., is near the Palisades of the Hudson, 20 miles N. of New York.

Alpine, a post-village of Schuyler co., N.Y., on Cayuga Creek, 6 miles E. of Havana and 18 miles NNE. of Elmira. Pop. about 200.

Alpine, a post-village of York co., Pa., 14 miles S. of Harrisburg.

Alpine, a post-village, the capital of Brewster co., Tex., on the Southern Pacific R., 62 miles SE. of Valentine. Its banking point is at El Paso. Pop. in 1900, 280.

Alpine, a city of Utah co., Utah, in a fine farming and fruit-growing locality, 7 miles NE. of Lehi City. Pop. in 1900, 520.

Alpine Pass, one of the loftiest passes of the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado. Altitude, 13,550 feet. See ALPINE.

Alpirsbach, al'péras-báx', a town of Württemberg, in the Black Forest circle, on the Kinsig. Pop. in 1900, 1385.

Alpnach, alp'nák, or Alpnacht, alp'nákt, a village of Switzerland, canton of Unterwalden, on the SW. arm of the Lake of Lucerne, 8 miles SSW. of Lucerne. Elevation above the sea, 1528 feet. Pop. in 1900, 1786. The Slide of Alpnach was a remarkable wooden chute, by which timber from the Pilatus was formerly conveyed to the lake. The village of ALPNACH-STAD lies at the foot of the mountain,  $\frac{1}{4}$  miles to the northward. It is the starting-point for the ascent of Pilatus, and a station on the Lucerne-Brüning-Briens railway. The name Alpnach Lake (Alpnach-See) has been applied to the SW. arm of Lake Lucerne.

Al'port, a river port in Victoria co., Ontario, on Lake Muskoka, 4 miles from Bracebridge.

Alpowa, al'po'wa, a post-village of Garfield co., Wash., 15 miles W. of Lewiston, Idaho.

Alps, álp, an extensive mountain-system of Europe, situated half-way between the equator and the pole. They form a crescent-shaped chain, extending from near Savona, in Italy, to the outskirts of Vienna, Austria (the Raxalpe and Schneeberg, the latter in the Alpengipfel attaining 6810 feet), and in one or more secondary lines into Bosnia and Dalmatia. They thus cover parts of Italy, France, Switzerland, Germany (Bavaria), and Austria. In their further connections they may be said to form the central portion of the great mountain-system which, in a manner more or less connected, extends from Cape Finisterre, on the Atlantic, to the Black Sea. The length of the main chain may be put at about 660 miles, while the area of the surface covered by the mountains generally has been roughly computed to be about 80,000 sq. m., or not much less than the mainland of Great Britain. While the word "alp" strictly signifies a lofty pasture-meadow, the region of the Alps is pre-eminently that of towering and closely appressed mountains, with sharp and salient peaks, abrupt precipices, and confined valleys; and in this relation the word "alpine" has been introduced to designate regions having these characteristics. From the slopes of the Alps flow, directly or by affluents, several of the great rivers of Europe, the Danube, Rhine, Rhone, and Po.

The Alps have been variously subdivided, and have received numerous names to designate certain sections as determined by geographical position or geological construction. They are frequently designated as the Western Alps, comprising the north-and-south section extending from the Mediterranean to about the position of Mont Blanc, and including the series known as the Ligurian, Maritime, Cottian, and Graian Alps; the Central Alps, the great mass of mountains lying between the Great St. Bernard Pass, or Mont Blanc, and the Brenner Pass; and the Eastern Alps, the entire division lying to the eastward of the latter boundary. The central group is again divisible into a northern and southern series, the first of which embraces the magnificent Bernese group, and the latter the Pennine, Lepontine, San Bernardino, and Rhetian groups. Other subdivisions are the Albula, Julian, Dinaric, Carnic, and Noric Alps, the last extending well eastward into the valley of the Drave. The Dinaric Alps, NE. of the Adriatic, link this system to that of Albania and Greece. In their geotechnic construction the Alps may be said to have their continuation in the mountains of the Carpathian (and possibly Balkan) system, and also in the Apennines, with their prolongation, the Atlas Mountains of northern Africa.

Among the loftiest and best-known summits of the Alps are Mont Blanc, situated on the confines of France and Italy (15,782 feet), the culminating point of all Europe if the Caucasus are considered to be more properly a part of Asia; Monte Rosa, 15,215 ft.; Weisshorn, 14,804 ft.; Breit-horn, 13,685 ft.; Matterhorn, 14,780 ft.—these four in the Pennine group; Finsteraarhorn, 14,025 ft.; Jungfrau, 13,670 ft.; Mönch, 13,465 ft.; Eiger, 13,040 ft.; Schreckhorn, 13,385 ft.; Wetterhorn, 12,150 ft.—in the Bernese group; Ortler-Spitze, 12,800 ft.; and Grossglockner, 12,460 ft. Among the more famous of the Alpine passes traversed by roadway are the Mont Cenis (6860 ft.), which, since 1870, has been superseded by the railway tunnel of the same name; the Great St. Bernard, 8110 ft.; Simplon, 6590 ft. (shortly to be superseded by the Simplon Mountain tunnel); St. Gotthard, 6935 ft., now, like the Mont Cenis, also superseded by a railway tunnel (opened in 1880); Splügen, 6945 ft.; and Brenner, 4490 ft., which has been used as a carriage-road since 1772, and has had a railway operating over it since 1867. These various passes have brought France and Switzerland into direct connection with Italy. The Arlberg tunnel railway was opened for traffic in 1884. The most elevated of the Alpine roadways is that of the Stilfserjoch or Stelvio Pass, on the western confines of Tyrol, 9055 ft. In Switzerland the Furka post- and military-road attains an elevation of 7990 ft.

The higher Alps are covered with perpetual snow, and present, with their magnificent glaciers, innumerable cascades, and the forests and meadows which cover their flanks, the most imposing and picturesque scenery in Europe. The snow- and ice-fields of Switzerland alone have been computed to cover an area of over 800 sq. m.; but, vast though this extent is, the individual fields are inferior to those of the Scandinavian mountains. The line of perpetual snow lies between about 8500 and 10,000 feet, but glaciers descend to a level of 4000 feet, or lower. Perhaps the best known or most famous of the Alpine glaciers is the Mer-de-Glace, descending from the Mont Blanc mountains; but the largest and longest is the Aletsch, with a length of some 13 miles. In the eastern Alps the most beautiful ice-sheet is the Pasterze Glacier, fed by the snows and ice of the Grossglockner, of the Hohe-Tauern. All in all, there are about 600 glaciers in the Swiss Alps alone. Most of these have been receding for many years, and the evidences of past extensive glaciation are everywhere apparent.

The Alps are noted for their magnificent scenery, to which the almost indescribably charming lakes contribute not a little. Of these may be mentioned Lucerne, Geneva, Brienz, Thun, Zürich, and Constance, and the fjord-like lakes which on the south side connect the mountains with the lowland plains of Italy—Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, and Iseo. The König See of southern Bavaria and the lakes of Salzburg, Austria, are hardly inferior in scenic aspect to the lakes of Switzerland and Italy.

Among the remarkable phenomena connected with the Alps are the whirlwinds, called tourmentes by the French, and Guxen by the Germans, and the still more formidable "avalanches," as enormous masses of snow, which, detached by various causes from their original position, roll with tremendous noise and force over rock and precipice to the plains below. From the frequent occurrence of avalanches, some parts of the Alps are entirely uninhabited; and in others large patches of the tallest and strongest trees are left standing, in order to arrest their progress.

The higher ridges of the Alps consist of granite, gneiss, and other primitive rocks, flanked by a wide extent of limestone, sandstone, and slate. The summits ascend considerably above the line of perpetual snow, and traverse completely the zone of vegetable growth, except possibly that of mosses and lichens. The Alpine rose and a large number of other flowering plants reach the lower snow-line, and several species pass even completely beyond it, flourishing on exposed rock surfaces. Wheat is in many places cultivated at an elevation of 3600 feet, oats at 4900 ft., and barley at 5100 ft. The coniferous trees are still of good stature at 6500 ft., and a few of the forms ascend in scattering individuals to 8000 ft. Among the more distinctive types of the alpine fauna are the chamois (now rare and protected by the state), ibex, northern hare, marmot, and lömmergeier or bearded-vulture. The wolf and bear linger in a few unfrequented sections of the region.

The Alps are pre-eminently the type of the greatly compressed and folded mountain, and present wonderful examples of thrust movements, with innumerable overturns and dislocations. The folds thrown to the northwestward are particularly impressive. The final upheaval of the mountains appears to have been accomplished towards or a little in advance of the Middle Tertiary period, the previous periods permitting of a vast accumulation of Jurassic, Cretaceous, and Eocene deposits. Of the last-named the deposits of the Nummulitic series are especially interesting.

No region in the world is so largely visited for its scenic resources as the Alps, and nowhere has man been so actively helpful in making points of scenic interest accessible as in the region of these mountains. The charming valleys of Chamouni, Interlaken, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, Zermatt, and of the Engadine, are alike attractive for the grandeur of the scenery which surrounds them and for the peaceful comfort which they hold out to the traveller. Among the most inspiring high points of view are the Gorner Grat (10,290 feet), with its incomparable view over the Monte Rosa-Matterhorn group of mountains; the Pis Languard, 10,715 ft., overlooking the Bernina Alps; Mürren, 5385 ft., and the Wengernalp, 6160 ft., overlooking the giants of the Bernese Oberland; the Rigi, 5905 ft., and Pilatus, 6995 ft., both of them commanding most extensive panoramas of the greater Alpine chain; Franz-Josefs-Höhe, 7933 ft., overlooking the giants of the Glockner group; the Rochers-de-Naye, 6710 ft., back of Montreux, on Lake Geneva; and the Monte Genesee, 5590 ft., near Lake Lugano, with a view comparable to that from the Rigi. All these points are now reached by railway of one kind or another. Among the finest distant views of the Alps is that from the summit of the Milan cathedral.

Among the more noted first ascents of the Alpine summits are those of the Mont Blanc, by Balmat, in 1786; Grossglockner, by Prince Salm-Reiferscheid, in 1800; Ortler, by Pichler, in 1804; Jungfrau, by the brothers Meyer, in 1811; Finsteraarhorn, by the brothers Meyer, in 1812; Wetterhorn, by Desor and Dollfus, in 1844; Monte Rosa, by Smyth and Hudson, in 1855; Mönch, by Porger, in 1857; Eiger, by Barrington, in 1858; Schreckhorn, by Leslie Stephen, in 1861; Weisshorn, by Tyndall, in 1861; and Matterhorn, by Whymper, Hudson, and others, in 1865.

Alta Gracia, a town in Venezuela, at the mouth of the Maracaibo Strait.

Altai, al'ti', more correctly Alta Yim Ula (i.e., "golden mountain"), the name given to a vast system of highlands and lofty mountains of southern Siberia and Mongolia, and forming largely the boundary or border tract of the two countries between lon. 85° and 105° E. With the limits here assigned, the Altai begin to the northeastward of Lake Zaisan and extend eastward (to the S. of Lake Baikal) to the crossing of the Selenga River; they thus include the Sayan range, which by many geographers is considered to be a distinct chain. In the older geographical systems the Altai included nearly the whole of the entire northern mountain-system of Asia, extending through the Yablonoi and Stanovoi ranges to the NE. extremity of the continent. No concrete mountain-chain or range is to-day designated the Altai, the system being composed of intercommunicating and virgating ridges, spurs, and included or deflected plateaus, with no clearly marked-out constructional relationship uniting them, although most of the parts are referable to nearly uniform periods of geological time (Aozoan, Palaeozoic) and to similar lithological characters (granites, porphyries, schists, and largely metamorphosed sediments, containing much mineral wealth). A remarkable offshoot of the boundary Altai is that which is now commonly designated the Great Altai (Ektag-Altai), which traverses western Mongolia in a NW. and SE. direction, and defines on one side the deep depression of the upper Irtysh and the Urungu, a part of the great basin of Dzungaria. This Great (in reality lesser) Altai is perhaps part of the irregular mass or knot which in Siberia is known as the Bielukha, and culminates in Bielukha ("White") Mountain, now thought to be 14,800 feet high. Northwest of Bielukha lie the Katunia or Katunsk Mountains (Pillars of the Katunia), which are thought by some geographers to be the loftiest summits of the entire Altai system. The physiognomy of the Altai Mountains in their W. and S. divisions is generally grand and interesting. The rivers, which are very numerous, flow rapidly with full streams; and the forms of the stratified and metamorphic rocks, with the snowy mountains in the distance, lend to the scene the charm of perpetual novelty. The banks of the Katunia, in the heart of the mountains, present a landscape of most impressive character: an immense wall of rock extending from W. to E. supports fields of perpetual snow and glaciers, from the midst of which rise numerous rocky points; while in the distance are seen the two towering peaks, the Pillars of the Katunia, whose most elevated point is, according to Tchibatcheff, 12,790 feet. The lofty plateaus and moeslands that are held up between the various ridges are the feeding-ground of numerous reindeer, elk, and stags, while the rugged mountain slopes afford a safe retreat to the Polian sheep. Poplars, willows, and birches clothe the deeper valleys, and are succeeded on the higher levels by the conifers (fir, cedars, pines, and larches). The birch is found to an elevation of nearly 5000 feet. The area covered by perpetual snow in the Altai is very considerable, the height of the snow-line being found in a general way at about 7000 feet. The glaciers occupy a large extent. The Altai Mountains owe their importance chiefly to their mineral treasures, gold, silver, copper, and iron. The richest mining district, which is in part the domain of the imperial family, lies between Semipalatinsk and Kuznetsk, and includes a portion of the northern Ala-Tau. A variety of jasper, which takes a fine polish, may be enumerated among the valuable minerals of the Altai.

Amaxichi, à-màx-ee-kee, or Lev'kan, a seaport of Greece, the chief town of the island of Santa Maura or Leucadia, on its E. coast, and separated from the castle of Santa Maura by a lagoon about 1 mile across. Pop. about 6000. Amaxichi is the residence of a Greek archbishop. Near it are remains of cyclopean walls, probably those of the ancient Leuceas.

Amay, à-mà, a town of Belgium, 14½ miles SW. of Liège. Pop. (commune) about 5000.

Amazoc, à-mà-ohk', a town of Mexico, state of Puebla, 12 miles SSE. of Puebla.

Amazon, am'p-sən (Sp. pron. àm-à-thôn'), or Amazonas, sometimes called Marañon, má-rán-yón', formerly also Orellana, o-rèl-yà'nà, a South American river, which exceeds in volume every other river on the globe. It rises in the Peruvian Andes by two main branches, the Marañon (or Tunguragua) and the Ucayali or Apurimac. The Marañon, or western branch, which some geographers consider the head-stream, rises in Lake Laurococha, near the silver-mines of Cerro de Pasco, in lat. 10° 30' S. and lon. 76° 10' W., at an altitude exceeding 14,000 feet. It flows nearly northward for about 500 miles, in a continuous series of cataracts and rapids, in a deep valley between the parallel cordilleras of Peru. Approaching the boundary of Ecuador about lat. 5° S., it turns eastward through the debatable territory of Ecuador and Peru and joins the Ucayali, or main Amazon, at Nauta, about 370 feet above sea-level, after having traversed the famous narrows or pongo of Manseriche. The Ucayali, or eastern branch, which seems unquestionably to be the larger of the two head-waters, being itself navigable for several hundred miles, rises in about lat. 15° S., in the highland or ridge which defines on its northern boundary the lacustrine basin of Titicaca. It flows northward in a tortuous course, largely paralleling that of the Marañon, but in the main east of the Cordilleras; it develops into a sluggish stream in its lower reaches, and in its back-waters and overflows partakes largely of the character of the Amazon proper. The united Amazon, which, between Tabatinga, on the Brazilian-Peruvian frontier, and the mouth of the Rio Negro, is known to the natives as the Solimões, now takes a predominantly eastward course to the sea, which it enters through a vast open estuary, devoid of modern delta formation, and estimated roughly to be 150 miles wide. The Amazon is the only stream of first magnitude whose main course is directed latitudinally; its immediate valley, therefore, is largely free of marked climatic changes. The mouth of the stream lies directly on the equator, and for considerably over 2000 miles the course of the waters is confined within a divergence of five degrees of latitude. The total length of the Amazon is variously estimated at from 3300 to 4000 miles, but probably it does not exceed, including its main windings and with the Ucayali as its head stream, 3000 miles. Its course in Brazilian territory alone is 2200-2400 miles, over all of which it is navigable for vessels of large draught. At Tabatinga, where the river enters Brazil from Peruvian territory, the width of the channel is 1½ miles, at the entrance of the Madeira nearly or fully 3 miles, and below Santarem, which is still several hundred miles from the mouth, 10 miles. About 75 miles above Santarem, at the narrows of Obidos, the mighty stream contracts to about 2000 yards, its depth at this place being 250-330 feet. The average depth of the stream below the influx of the Rio Negro, which is not much less than 1000 miles from the sea, is nearly 30 fathoms. Soundings have been reported of 500 and 600 feet, but their accuracy is somewhat in question. The average velocity of its current is 3 miles an hour. The area drained by this river and its tributaries is estimated at 2,000,000 sq. m., or not much less than two-thirds the area of the whole of Europe. The volume and impetus of the river are so great that it carries its fresh water unmixed into the sea a distance of about 200 miles. At the narrows of Obidos the discharge of water is about 190,000 cubic metres per second. "Its vast expanse," says Orton, "presenting below Tefe magnificent reaches, with blank horizons, and forming a barrier between different species of animals; its system of back-channels joining the tributaries and linking a series of lagoons too many ever to be named; its network of navigable waters, stretching over one-third of the continent; its oceanic fauna—porpoises and manatees, gulls and frigate-birds—remind the traveller of a great inland sea. The side-channels through the forest, called by the Indians igarapés or canoe-paths, are one of the characteristic features of the Amazon. They often run to a great distance parallel to the great river and intersecting the tributaries, so that one can go from Santarem 1000 miles up the Amazon without once entering it. These natural highways will be of immense advantage for intercommunication." No cataract or waterfall interrupts navigation on the main stream for 2400 miles, and, as a trade-wind blows almost constantly westward against the current, the navigation up or down has always something in its favor. Including the tributaries, it offers not less than 10,000 or 15,000 miles of water suitable for steamboat navigation. A decree of the Brazilian government in 1867 opened this navigation to the flags of all European nations. But as yet no busy towns are found along its banks, except Pará, near its mouth, and on that constricted branch of the estuary which is sometimes known as the Pará River. Manóas, with a population of about 22,000, is situated on the Rio Negro a few miles above its junction with the Amazon. Direct steamboat navigation now extends to Yurimaguas, a station of Peru, on the Huallaga arm of the river. This river flows through a forest unparalleled in extent, an evergreen forest so dense and impenetrable as to defy access except by navigation, and tenanted by innumerable animals, among which the monkey tribe holds a conspicuous place. The human population of this region is very sparse. In the most densely peopled portions it has been estimated that there is only 1 man to every 4 sq. m. During the rainy season the river overflows its banks, submerging the country for hundreds of miles. The waters abound in fish, and it is stated that upward of 2000 species are known from them and their tributaries. Turtles are a most important product of the river. A remarkable feature in the Amazonian fauna is the abundance of cetaceans, porpoises, and manatees through nearly the whole extent of the river.

The Amazon has upward of 200 tributaries, 15 of which have lengths varying from 800 to 1500 or 2000 miles. The largest of these is the Madeira, whose length has been variously estimated at from 1500 to 2000 miles, or even considerably more. The principal tributaries that enter from the N. are the Napo, Putumayo, Japura, and Rio Negro. Those that are received from the S. are the Jabari or Yavari, Jutay, Juruá, Tefe, Purus, Madeira, Tapajós, Xingú, and Tocantins. The Rio Negro is connected with the Orinoco by the Cassiquiare, which is a natural and navigable canal traversing a plain which, at periods of high water, is too low and level to form a water-shed between the two rivers. The descent of the Amazon is only 2 inches to the mile below the mouth of the Napo, which is 1800 miles in a direct line from the ocean. The Atlantic tide is perceptible at Obidos. At the mouth of the river is a remarkable tidal phenomenon, called the bore or piroroca, which occurs about the time of full moon. The water of the ocean runs into the river in waves about 15 feet high, moving with a violence and momentum which are dangerous to small craft. The difference between high water and low water is about 50-60 feet. The period of high water in the northern affluents is in summer and autumn, but the Amazon receives its largest accession from the southern affluents when the sun is on the south side of the equator, in November, December, and January. The mouth of the Amazon was discovered in 1500 by a Spaniard, Vicente Yañes Pinzon, but the first European who navigated or explored it was Orellana, who in 1541 descended the stream from the mouth of the Napo to the sea.

Amazonas, á-má-zo'nás, the westernmost and largest state of Brazil, bounded by British Guiana, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, and E. by the states of Mato Grosso and Pará. Area, about 750,000 sq. m. It is bisected by the Amazon and traversed by many of its navigable tributaries, and is mainly covered by dense forests, rich in natural products, especially rubber. Steamboat navigation has been established on the Rio Negro, Madeira, and Purus, besides the Amazon. Capital, Manaus. Pop. in 1890, 147,915.

Amazonas, á-má-so'nás, a department of Peru, bounded N. by Ecuador, E. by the department of Loreto, S. by Libertad, and W. by Cajamarca. Area, about 14,000 sq. m. The Marañon forms its western boundary. It is mainly covered by virgin forests. Capital, Chachapoyas. Pop. in 1896, 70,676.

America, Am-é-ré-ká (Fr. Amérique, Am-é-rek'; Ger. Amerika, Am-é-re-ká; It. Sp., and Port., America, Am-é-re-ká), sometimes called the New World, the continental land-mass of the Western Hemisphere, named in honor of Amerigo Vesputti, a Florentine, who visited South America in 1499. It is the longest continuous body of land on the globe, and extends in its non-insular part from Point Barrow, in the northwest, lat.  $71^{\circ} 24' N.$ , to Cape Froward, in Patagonia, lat.  $53^{\circ} 54' S.$  The outlying lands and islands project the boundaries of America properly to Cape Morris Jesup, in the "United States Coast,"  $83^{\circ} 39' N.$ , and Cape Horn,  $55^{\circ} 59' S.$  Its latitudinal extent is, therefore, upward of 9500 miles, while the area covered is in round figures 16,300,000 sq. m. America consists essentially of the two main continental areas of North and South America, both of which are broadly expanded on their northern faces and taper rapidly towards the south; in the Isthmus of Panama the width of the land-mass is constricted to less than 30 miles. Whether or not Greenland should be considered as being properly a part of America is a question that has not yet been decided by geographers.

The physical features of America are on the most gigantic scale. Here are many of the greatest rivers and lakes in the world, the highest mountains, except those of Asia, the most extensive areas of unbroken plain, and the most magnificent forests. It possesses few extensive tracts that are not accessible through its magnificent natural water-courses. The population of America is estimated at 145,000,000.

NORTH AMERICA (Fr. Amérique du Nord, Am-é-rek' dû nor; Ger. Nord Amerika, nor-Am-é-re-ká; Span. América Setentrional, Am-é-re-ká sá-tén-tre-o-nál'), the northern continental part of America, is bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, on the E. by the Atlantic, and on the W. by the Pacific; the Gulf of Mexico forms a large part of the southern boundary. It is very irregular in form, and deeply indented by bays, gulfs, and inlets, principally on the side of the Atlantic. Its area, inclusive of outlying lands or islands, is estimated at about 8,300,000 sq. m., and the population, inclusive of that of Central America, at about 105,000,000. The political divisions of the mainland are Canada, the United States, the republic of Mexico, British Honduras, and the several states of the former republic of Central America,—viz., Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Salvador (see CENTRAL AMERICA), and the newly constituted republic of Panama.

Islands, Bays, and Gulfs.—Between the Atlantic Ocean and the Caribbean Sea is an extensive archipelago, called the West Indies, which extends eastward from the Gulf of Mexico nearly to the 60th meridian of W. longitude. The largest of these islands are Cuba, Haiti, Jamaica, and Porto Rico, which are known as the Greater Antilles, connected with which to the northeastward are the Bahamas, and to the southward the Lesser Antilles (Leeward and Windward Islands), the whole forming a system which extends from near the southern point of Florida to the coast of Venezuela in South America. The other principal islands (not reckoning Greenland or the islands of the Arctic archipelago N. of Canada) are Newfoundland, Cape Breton, and Long Island, in the Atlantic; and Vancouver, Queen Charlotte's, Prince of Wales, Sitka, Kodiak, and the Aleutian Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. The northern and eastern sides of this continent are indented by large bodies of water, such as Hudson Bay (a great, but comparatively shallow, interior sea), the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which gives entrance to the great lakes, the Bay of Fundy, Delaware Bay, Chesapeake Bay, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Bay of Honduras. The inlets of the Pacific coast are not so many or so large. The most important of these are the Gulf of California, the Bay of San Francisco, Puget and Queen Charlotte Sounds, Cook's Inlet, Bristol Bay, and Norton and Kotzebue Sounds, the last four indenting the coast of Alaska.

Mountains, Table-lands, etc.—The dominant features of the North American continent may be said to be the great mountain-chains that lie off from or define the western contour, the lesser Appalachian system of elevations on the east, the intervening central depression, plain, or basin (largely the basin of the Mississippi River), the Atlantic coastal plains, and the plateaus or highlands of Mexico, Labrador (and Greenland). The mountain-ranges of North America form two widely distant highland regions, separated from each other by the vast interior plain to which reference has just been made, and which contains the great fresh-water lakes and is drained to the S. by the Mississippi River and its tributaries, to the NE. by the St. Lawrence, which is the outlet of the great lakes, and to the N. by the Saskatchewan, the Athabasca, the Mackenzie, and numerous smaller streams. This plain extends from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Ocean, about 2800 miles, and between it and the Pacific Ocean the highest ranges are found, extending nearly N. and S., or NW. and SE., largely parallel with the coast of that ocean. An inner system or chain, commonly regarded as the bulwark of the continent, and for a long time, but erroneously, considered to be a direct continuation of the South American Andes, is known as the Rocky Mountains. The northern limits of this vast mountain-system have not yet been determined, nor has the direct continuity extending into Alaska been ascertained. Southward, the continuous ridges terminate abruptly a little to the south of Santa Fé, N. Mex., but broken lines or elevations may be considered to unite them with similar elevations of the Sierra Madre Oriental of Mexico. The Rocky Mountains constitute the "continental divide" of the United States, but in Canada they are traversed by one or more streams. A large number of peaks of the Rocky Mountains, both in the United States and Canada, attain elevations of 13,000–14,000 feet and over. Among these may be mentioned Blanca Peak, in Colorado, 14,464 feet,—the culminating point of the chain in the United States proper,—Pike's Peak, 14,147 feet, also in Colorado, and the recently discovered Mounts Columbia, Bryce, Forbes, and Lyell, in Canada, to which elevations of from 12,000 to 14,000 feet are ascribed. Whether or not the seemingly more or less isolated Mount McKinley, in central Alaska, is a part of the true Rocky Mountain system, remains to be determined. Recent measurements seem to give it an elevation of 20,464 feet, which would place it as the culminating point of the North American continent. See ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

Between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean is a long and lofty range, which is nearly parallel with the coast (in places not more than 150 miles from it), and is called in California the Sierra Nevada. Its northern continuation in Oregon and Washington is the Cascade Range. The highest peak of this range is Mount Whitney, in California, 14,898 feet. The Sierra Nevada merges in southern California into the Coast Range of mountains, but is otherwise distinct. It would seem that to the latter belong many of the giants of Alaska and the adjacent region.—Mount St. Elias, 18,026 feet; Mount Logan (Canada), 18,000–19,000 ft.; Crillon, 15,900 (?) ft.; and Fairweather, 14,508 (?) ft. (See SIERRA NEVADA and COAST RANGE.) The Atlantic border of the North American continent is outlined by a line of minor elevations, the mountains of the Appalachian system, whose general trend is NE. and SW. Their various sections are known as the White Mountains, Green Mountains, Adirondacks, Catskills, Alleghenies, Blue Ridge, etc. The system culminates in Black Dome, or Mount Mitchell, of the Black Mountains, N.C., 6710 ft. See APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS and ALLEGHANY MOUNTAINS.

The Great Basin and Southwestern Plateau.—Between the Sierra Nevada and the Wasatch Mountains (a range which crosses Utah about midway between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada) is a vast arid plateau called the Great Basin, or Fremont's Basin, which is about 500 miles in extent and has an elevation of over 4000 feet. Here are salt lakes which have no outlet, and rivers which send no tribute to the sea. Southeastward and eastward of the Great Basin lie the vast elevated tracts that constitute the great plateau of the southwestern United States, whose broadest development is found in northern Arizona and the contiguous parts of Utah. The surface of the land is here elevated between 8000 and 9000 feet above the level of the sea. It is in this region that are found the most remarkable river-courses of the globe, the deeply incised cañons of the Colorado and some of its tributaries presenting eloquent testimony to the wearing action of running water. (See GRAND CAÑON OF THE COLORADO.) Much of the greater part of Mexico is constituted by the central plateau, which in a measure is the continuation of the plateau system of the United States, and attains an elevation along its southern limits of about 8500 feet. On it are situated some of the most gigantic volcanoes of the globe, the greater number of which are extinct or somnolent. The most famous of these are Orizaba, 18,250 feet; Popocatepetl, 17,523 ft.; Ixtaccihuatl, 16,960 ft.; and the Nevado de Toluca, 14,950 ft. Colima, an active cone situated off the plateau, has an elevation of 12,990 ft. Numerous active and extinct cones are found throughout the length of Central America, rising, as in the case of the volcanoes of Agua and Fuego, in Guatemala, to elevations of over 12,000 and 13,000 ft. The most destructive eruption recorded is that of Coseguina, Nicaragua, in 1835.

Volcanic Regions of the United States.—None of the volcanoes of the United States, excepting those of Alaska, are in activity to-day, although St. Helen's, in Oregon, and Baker, in Washington, appear both to have been in eruption since 1840, the former in 1845 and the latter in 1854, 1855, and 1870. Of the resting or extinct cones are Mount Hood, in Oregon, 11,225 ft.; Shasta, in California, 14,442 ft.; and Rainier (Tacoma), in Washington, 14,526 ft., the last named one of the most beautiful and symmetrically formed cones of the globe. Iliamna, a giant cone situated on Cook's Inlet, in southern Alaska, is active, as is also the still more gigantic Mount Wrangell, estimated to be between 17,000 and 19,000 ft., in the interior. In association with the volcanic phenomena of the North American continent should be mentioned the vast lava-plateau of the Columbia-Snake River region and the wonderful geyser district of the Yellowstone River. See YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Rivers and Lakes.—No continent is more amply supplied with large navigable rivers, opening the interior to the commerce of the world. All the great development of the hydraulic system is on the east side of the Pacific mountain-chain. From the great interior plain the Mackenzie River runs northward to the Arctic Ocean, the St. Lawrence into the Atlantic, and the Mississippi and Rio Grande southward to the Gulf of Mexico. The Mississippi with its tributaries affords a greater extent of inland navigation than all the rivers of Europe, although very much less than the Amazon. Its principal affluents are the Missouri, Ohio (whose largest tributary is the Tennessee), Arkansas, and Red rivers. Steamboats ascend the Mississippi to St. Paul, upward of 2000 miles from its mouth, and they ascend the Missouri to Fort Benton, which is about 1500 miles above the junction of the Missouri with the Mississippi. The length of the Missouri-Mississippi is about 4000 miles. The length of the Yukon is not far from 2000 miles. Other great rivers are the Saskatchewan-Nelson, Columbia, and Colorado. The St. Lawrence is the outlet of five great lakes,—namely, Superior, which has an area of about 31,000 sq. m., Huron (22,000 sq. m.), Michigan (about 22,500 sq. m.), Erie, and Ontario. These constitute the largest collection of fresh water on the globe, are connected by straits and short rivers, and are channels of a very extensive commerce, in which hundreds of steamboats are employed. All the water which issues from four of these lakes plunges over a precipice at Niagara Falls, the most magnificent cataract in the world. (See NIAGARA FALLS.) The other principal lakes are Athabasca, Winnipeg, Great Slave Lake, and Great Bear Lake, in British America; Champlain and Great Salt Lake (relict of a former vastly more extensive sheet of water, designated by geologists Lake Bonneville), in the United States; and Lake Nicaragua, in the republic of Nicaragua. The states of Maine, New York, Michigan, Minnesota, Florida, and Oregon contain multitudes of beautiful lakes from 1 to 45 miles in length.

Great Plains, Prairies, and Bad Lands.—These constitute a part of the vast interior basin of the United States, and are in the form largely of savannas or treeless tracts, in some parts, as in Wyoming and the Dakotas, being sculptured into an irregular and fantastic relief. The Great Plains rise gradually in their course westward from the Mississippi River, and at the base of the Rocky Mountains attain an elevation of 6000 feet.

Climate.—The climate is variable and generally healthy, but is subject to great extremes of heat and cold. The temperature of the Atlantic coast is both in winter and for the whole year from 16° to 20° lower than that of places of the same latitude in western Europe; but the climate of the Pacific slope in California and Oregon is milder than that of the Atlantic states. In British America and the northern United States the winters are long and severe. The north and northwest winds, coming from the northern and centrally refrigerated regions, are not obstructed by any chain of mountains, and often reduce the temperature even of the Middle States to 10° or 15° below zero.

The difference between the mean summer temperature and that of winter amounts to 44° at Philadelphia and 54° at Fort Snelling, Minn. The entire range of the thermometer at San Diego, Cal., is about 50° F., but in the Atlantic states it is 110° or more. The table-lands of Mexico, though in the torrid zone, have a delightful and temperate climate, except for liability to long droughts. The extremes of heat and cold in the Mississippi Valley are as great as on the Atlantic coast. In no continental area are far-sweeping atmospheric disturbances so numerous as in the heart of the United States, and the familiar manifestations of hurricane winds, blizzards, and cyclones are alike remarkable for the extent of territory which they traverse or compass as for the destruction which they carry in their paths. The highest temperature recorded in the continent, in the desert contact region of California and Arizona, is probably 118°–123° (shade). Temperatures of 100°–105° have been noted in nearly all the non-mountainous tracts of the United States. A minimum temperature of –50° to –55° has been recorded at Fort Sanders, Wyo., and Fort Ellis, Mont. In Alaska the winter temperature appears sometimes to drop to –66° or still lower.

The distribution of rainfall over the greater part of the continent east of the 100th meridian is fairly uniform, ranging from about 25 to 40 inches per year. On the Gulf border the precipitation frequently reaches 50–55 inches, and in the Puget Sound tract 80 inches or more. On the other hand, in many parts of Nevada and Wyoming the amount not infrequently does not exceed 8–10 inches. Rainless (practically) areas are restricted to the desert regions of Arizona, Nevada, and southern California.

Geology and Mineral Resources.—The geological construction of the North American continent dates back to the earliest geological epoch known, and is in the main marked by a progressive evolution of the land-form as it is now represented. Both in the east and in the west rocks of Laurentian or Archaean ages have been assumed to mark out the future contours of the continent. The great central basin is made up largely of Palaeozoic deposits, ranging to and including the Carboniferous, but the vast capping of Cretaceous strata, which extend in practically unbroken line from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Sea, show that during this period the continent was divided into an eastern and a western half. The Atlantic border, from Long Island to Texas, is in the main made up of Tertiary strata, sloping gradually towards the sea, and giving evidence of slow emergence from, or a steady recession of, the oceanic waters. The main mass of the Rocky Mountains was also upheaved during the Tertiary period, and they therefore constitute a series of “new” mountains as compared with the ancient (late Palaeozoic or early Mesozoic) Alleghanies. Evidences of extensive glaciation during the period of the Great Ice Age are almost everywhere plainly manifest from Labrador and northern New Jersey to the Missouri, and from Hudson Bay and the northwest of British Columbia to the 42d and 30th parallels of north latitude.

The mineral resources of the continent are very great, and have given fields to mining operations of the largest scale. Gold is found (and largely mined, whether as reef-gold or in the form of placers) over the greater part of the continuous mountain-tract extending from Central America to Alaska; the recent discoveries in the Klondike, Yukon, and Cape Nome regions would seem to indicate that the auriferous tract unites with that of Kamtohatka and south-central Siberia.

There are rich silver-mines in Mexico, Nevada, New Mexico, Montana, Utah, and Colorado. Copper abounds in the upper peninsula of Michigan (on the shores of Lake Superior), in Arizona, etc. Iron, lead, and coal abound in many of the United States. Antimony, cobalt, nickel, platinum, titanium, quicksilver, tin, zinc, etc., are also found. Large quantities of petroleum are procured in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, etc. Natural gas occurs over a wide area in the north-central part of the United States and in other regions. The greatest known deposits of coal in the world, with the possible exception of those of China, are those of the United States.

Vegetable Productions.—The flora of the eastern part of North America, from the 36th parallel to the Arctic regions, is physiognomically that of the north temperate regions generally, although it differs somewhat markedly from the European flora in the paucity of umbelliferous and cruciferous plants, in the absence of heaths, and in the abundance of asters and solidagos. The forests of this region produce many species of oak, maple, ash, beech, birch, cedar, hickory, fir, gum, pine, poplar, wild cherry, willow, chestnut, elm, locust, linden, cypress (Taxodium), tulip-tree, walnut, etc. In the region of the former Northwest Territory of Canada and in Alaska the black and white spruce and larch pass to and beyond the 68th parallel of latitude. Flowering herbaceous plants are a part of the flora of Greenland as far north as lat. 82°. Among the forest-trees of the southern United States are the Magnolia grandiflora and other magnolias, the live-oak, deciduous cypress, long-leaved pine, and palmetto. The flora of western North America constitutes a distinct region,—that of California, Oregon, etc. It is remarkable for the beauty and brilliant color of its flowers and for the magnitude of its coniferous trees, many of which are peculiar to that region. Among these are the Sequoia gigantea, which grows 300 feet high, with a diameter of 30 feet, the redwood (Sequoia sempervirens), the Pinus ponderosa, Pinus Lambertiana, Abies Douglasii, and other species of fir. The principal cultivated plants and fruits of the continent are corn, wheat, barley, oats, cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar-cane, flax, potatoes, clover, beans and peas, apples, pears, peaches, grapes, and oranges. The flora of Mexico and Central America is, in the lowlands, of an essentially tropical character, with a vast development of leguminous, orchidaceous, flaccuous, and melastomaceous plants. The rubber, or wild-fig, and the bombax, or silk-cotton tree, are marked constituents of this flora. Both on the lowlands and on the highlands a vast variety of cactuses is a marked feature of the vegetation. The mahogany, logwood, and lignum-vitæ are also parts of the Central American flora. The most important cultivated plants are corn, sugar-cane, sweet potatoes, indigo, tobacco, coffee, cacao, rubber, and vanilla.

Zoology.—The North American fauna, frequently referred to as the Nearctic, is pre-eminently—at least in its broader features—that of the north temperate and Arctic regions generally, and hence is, by perhaps most naturalists, united to-day with the faunas of Europe and north-central Asia into the one zoogeographical division known as the Holarctic. Many of its commoner mammalian forms, such as the wolf, fox (in two or more species), lynx, Polar bear, marten, glutton, beaver, elk, reindeer, etc., are identical specifically with their representative forms of Eurasia. A similar identity unites many of the bird forms, such as the falconines, owl, grouse, raven, etc. Of the more distinctive North American animal types may be mentioned the grizzly bear, bison (very closely related to the bison or aurochs of Europe), which is now nearly extinct, stag, cougar or panther (puma or American lion), big-horn or Rocky Mountain sheep, the pronghorn, and Rocky Mountain goat, a lanigerous antelope. To these may be added the raccoon, opossum, Canadian porcupine, and the vast series of rodents which are known as gophers, pocket-mice, and prairie-dogs. The jaguar enters the United States from the south, as do likewise several species of armadillo. Monkeys are found in Central America and Mexico.

Of the distinctively North American birds mention should be made of the wild turkey, mocking-bird, robin, cat-bird, and sage-grouse; and particularly in the tropical and subtropical tracts, of numerous species of parrot, humming-bird, tanager, and trogon.

Among the reptiles are the various horned-toads of the arid regions of the southwestern United States, the highly venomous rattlesnakes and moccasins, and, in the south, the iguanian lizards, the alligator, and crocodile (penetrating as far north as Biscayne Bay, in Florida).

Races of Men.—The origin of the indigenous population, the Indians, is unknown. It appears that in not remotely prehistoric ages North America was inhabited by partially civilized and agricultural people (mound-builders), who were perhaps not very, if at all, different from the savage and nomadic Indians of modern times. Among the monuments and evidences of their existence are numerous fortifications, mounds, walls of regular masonry, pottery, implements of copper, etc. The northern part of this continent is inhabited by the Eskimos, who call themselves Inuit, a race of low stature, about 4½ or 5 feet high, subsisting chiefly on fish, blubber, and the flesh of seals. They are ignorant and uncivilized, coming but little in contact with civilization, but with naturally good characteristics. They have a partially Mongolian aspect, but are ordinarily considered to be an offshoot of the North American Indian. The so-called "red" men are generally tall, robust, and well-proportioned, with prominent cheek-bones, long, coarse, black hair, and thin beard. The complexion of some tribes is copper-red or brown, presenting a considerable diversity of shade. Outside of the Spanish-speaking countries they are to a great extent nomadic and predatory in habits, subsisting mainly by hunting and fishing, but some tribes cultivate the soil. They are distinguished for their power of endurance and their stoical fortitude and apathy. They are warlike; many of the tribes manifest implacable hostility to other tribes. They are in a low state of intellectual development, are averse to the restraints of education and regular industry, and cannot easily be induced to substitute civilized habits and institutions for their wild and primitive mode of life. Several tribes in the United States, however, have settled down to a sedentary and progressive mode of existence, and the Mexican Indians are for the most part peaceful and industrious. The number of languages spoken by the aborigines, including those of South America, is estimated at several hundred. The population of Mexico and Central America consists of oreoles, whites, mestizoes, and Indians. The mestizoes are the offspring of white and Indian parents. Vast ruins, as those of Mitla and Palenque, in major Mexico; of Uxmal and Chichenitza, in Yucatan; of Copan, in Guatemala, dating back to a period of perhaps 1000 years or more, attest a somewhat higher grade of civilization than is now found among the native races, but their origin is still obscure. They are seemingly the construction of one or more peoples whose nearest of kin are the modern Mayas and the Aztecs of the period of the Spanish conquest. Among the inhabitants of the United States are about 10,000,000 persons of the African race. The European or white population of this continent consists mostly of descendants of Anglo-Saxons, Germans, Irish, Scandinavians, and Spaniards.

History.—Columbus discovered the Bahamas, Cuba, and Haiti in 1492, and is generally accorded the distinction of being the discoverer of America, although in all probability the Norsemen had landed on the American shores about the year 1000. John Cabot discovered the coast of North America, probably in the neighborhood of Cape Breton, in 1497. About 1500, Cortesal, a Portuguese, visited the coast of Labrador. Ponce de Leon discovered Florida in 1513. Cortes and Alvarado conquered Mexico and Central America in 1519-23. In 1524, Giovanni Verrazano, a Florentine navigator, patronized by Francis I. of France, explored the eastern coast of North America. Jacques Cartier ascended the St. Lawrence in 1535. The Spaniards founded St. Augustine in 1565. French colonies were planted in Canada and English colonies on the Atlantic coast, but in 1759-60 the former passed under the government of the British, and the latter declared themselves independent in 1776 and established the republic of the United States, whose dominion was extended to the Rocky Mountains by the Louisiana purchase in 1803, over a great part of Spanish North America through the Mexican war of 1846-48, and over Alaska by purchase in 1867. In 1810-21, Mexico threw off the Spanish yoke, and has since remained independent. In 1823 the five states of Central America, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Salvador, having emancipated themselves from the Spanish rule, united to form a federal republic. The union was dissolved in 1839, since which this region has been largely a scene of revolution and anarchy.

SOUTH AMERICA (Fr. Amérique du Sud, à-mà'reek' dü süd; Ger. Südamerika, süd-à-mà're-kä; Span. América Meridional, à-mà're-kà mà-re-dò-nàl'), a vast southwardly tapering peninsular continent, connected on the NW. with North America by the Isthmus of Panama, is bounded on the N. by the Caribbean Sea, on the NE. and E. by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the W. by the Pacific. It extends from Punta Gallinas, Colombia, lat. 12° 24' N., to Cape Froward, Patagonia, lat. 53° 54' S.,—or, with its prolongation in Fuegia, to 53° 59' S. (Cape Horn),—a distance of about 4600 miles. It approaches the south pole almost exactly 1000 miles nearer than Australia, and 1250 miles nearer than Africa; and it can easily be shown, on the evidence of the line of shallows south of Patagonia, the disjointed lands (New Shetlands, New Georgia, Graham Land (Island), etc.) lying still further to the south, and the recent discovery of fossil araucarians (South American pines) on Graham Land, that the former approach to the pole was still greater, pointing perhaps even to a union with an Antarctic continent. The greatest breadth of the continent, which is measured on the latitude of approximately 5° S., is about 3200 miles. The estimated area is somewhat more than 6,800,000 sq. m., about three-fourths of which lie in the torrid zone. There are few deep gulfs or bays, and the large islands immediately adjoining the coast are restricted to Trinidad, Joannes or Marajó (at the mouth of the Amazon), Tierra del Fuego, Wellington, and Chiloe. The Falkland Islands, lying eastward of the extremity of Patagonia, are sometimes considered to be a part of South America. Pop. estimated at between 35,000,000 and 40,000,000.

Political Divisions.—These are Brazil, British Guiana, Dutch Guiana, French Guiana, Venezuela, Ecuador, Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and Paraguay.

Plains and Savannas.—The dominant features of the South American continent are constituted by the massive mountain-system, Andes or Cordilleras, which defines the western or Pacific coast,—the most extensive, although not the most elevated, mountain-system of the globe,—and the vast plains and bottom-lands which outline or lie in the courses of the principal rivers or mark positions of the receding floor of the sea. Such are the Gran Chaco of the Paraná, the llanos of the Orinoco, the pampas of Argentina and Patagonia, and the wonderful forest tract of the valley of the Amazon, which is the largest continuous forest region of the world. It is in this tract that the wonders and manifold variety of a tropical vegetation are best exhibited, and where animal life has been most screened from the inroads of civilization. Comparatively few settlements, except of rude savages, are found within its area, and the avenues of travel remain almost exclusively the water-courses. Contrasting with this exuberant forest region are the open plains that have already been referred to, which are in the main treeless, in some places of a distinctly steppe-like character, like the llanos of Orinoco, and elsewhere supporting a luxurious growth of tall grasses. Of this latter type are the savannas of the Gran Chaco, which may be taken to be the counterpart of the North American prairies, although they bear evidences of having been at one time covered with forest. The campos of Brazil are largely of the same character.

Mountains.—As in the case of North America, so in South America mountain-chains define parts of the borders of both great oceans, that of the Pacific coast completely so. The Serra de Mantiqueira and the more eastwardly lying Serra do Mar are a part of the Highlands of Brazil, the former extending from São Paulo to near the mouth of the São Francisco River. It consists of ancient, highly eroded rocks, and attains in Itatiaia (Itatiaia) an elevation of 8900 feet. Less lofty are the beautiful and fantastically formed Organ Mountains of the Serra do Mar, or coast range, which appear nowhere to attain 7000 feet. They are a prominent feature of the scenery of the Bay of Rio de Janeiro. More or less lofty mountain elevations, trending in a generally N. and S. direction, occur in the interior of Brazil, and others, with, in the main, an opposed or E. and W. course, in Venezuela and the Guianas (Acarai, Parima, Pacaraima). The famous table-top mountain, Roraima, one of an extensive series of precipitous bluffs giving evidence of vast erosion, lies on or near the British-Venezuelan boundary and reaches an elevation of 7384 feet.

The main mountain-system of South America is, however, constituted by the Andes, which, removed not generally further than about 100 miles from the coast, follow closely the contours of the continent, and unquestionably stand in direct relation with its trend. The mountains extend in an uninterrupted line from the extremity of Patagonia to the most northerly point of Colombia, or over a latitudinal distance of more than 4500 miles. Throughout most of this vast extent it is unbroken by a single water-course cutting its passage across it. In Colombia the Andes are deflected into three main branches, one of which passes eastward through Venezuela and shows its broken continuation in the islands of the Lesser Antilles, while another forms part of the axis of the Isthmus of Panama. Among the loftiest or most remarkable summits of the Andean range, many of which are constituted by some of the most gigantic volcanoes of the globe, are Chimborazo (extinct volcano, 20,498 feet) and Cotopaxi (a destructively active cone, 19,613 ft.), in Ecuador; Illampu or Sorata (about 22,000 ft.) and Illimani (about 22,000 ft.), non-volcanic mountains in the eastern division, or Cordillera Real, of Bolivia; Aconagua (23,080 ft., seemingly the culminating point of the Western Hemisphere), in the Argentine Republic, and Tupungato (22,000 ft.), in Chile, both of these long-extinct volcanoes. See ANDES.

Rivers and Lakes.—South America possesses the largest river of the world, the Amazon, which has a length variously estimated at from 3300 to 3600 miles, and is, therefore, considerably shorter than the combined Missouri-Mississippi. Its drainage basin has been estimated to cover an area about three-quarters of that of the whole of Europe; and it is stated that its discharge is considerably greater than that of all the streams of the United States taken collectively. It is navigable in one or more of its head branches for 3000 miles from its mouth, and opens an easy communication from the Atlantic almost to the base of the Andes. It is connected with the Orinoco (through the Rio Negro) by a natural and navigable canal called the Casiquiare, the surface here being too low and level to form a water-shed between the two basins. The principal tributaries of the Amazon are the Rio Negro, Putumayo, Madeira, Japura, Purús, Tapajós, and Xingú, each of which measures nearly, or much over, a thousand miles in length, and constitutes a navigable stream of great importance. (See AMAZON.) The Paraná, which is the second longest stream of South America, has a course (estimated) of 2100-2500 miles, and drains an area about equal to that of the Congo or the Missouri-Mississippi. It receives a great affluent, the Paraguay, and, together with the Uruguay, pours its waters into the Atlantic through a broad estuary, the Rio de la Plata. The extreme northern part of South America is drained by the Orinoco, Magdalena, Essequibo, Corentyn, and other rivers. Other great rivers are the Tocantins and the São Francisco. South America, like Australia, is almost entirely wanting in lakes of any magnitude, the largest being Titicaca, on the Peruvian-Bolivian plateau, whose surface covers an area about fifteen times that of Lake Geneva, in Switzerland, but only about half that of Lake Ladoga, in Russia, or of Ontario. It is about 130 miles in length, has a greatest depth of 700 feet or more, and holds a position 12,200 feet above sea-level. It occupies part of a vast and ancient lacustrine basin, and gives evidence of having stood formerly at a much higher level than it does to-day. It has no seaward discharge. See TITICACA.

Climate.—In the portions of South America which lie in the torrid zone the climate is modified by trade-winds, high mountains, and other local causes. In the basin of the Amazon it is not very hot nor very unhealthy, the heat being tempered by immense forests and the east wind which generally blows up the river. This great plain is remarkable for the small seasonal variation of heat, and enjoys perpetual summer. Here the year is divided into two seasons, the wet and the dry, the former comprising the months from March or April to October or November. Excessive rains, however, occur even outside of this period, and their quantity and frequency are largely influenced by the absence or presence of forest. Along many parts of the Atlantic coast the annual rainfall is very moderate, but it is believed that over some parts of the great Amazonian valley the precipitation must be fully 400-500 inches or more. A narrow, rainless tract, partly in Peru and partly in Chile, and measuring nearly 1000 miles in length, is found on the west coast, between the Andes and the sea. Although lying mainly in the torrid zone, South America nowhere presents the extremes of heat of either Africa or Asia; indeed, its summer temperature is less accentuated than that of the southern United States. The hottest part of South America is on the steppes of Caracás, where the highest temperature is about 98°-100° in the shade. Brazil exhibits a considerable variety of climate. Pará, near the mouth of the Amazon, has an equable and delightful climate, with a mean annual temperature of 80°, a maximum of 95°, and a minimum of 65° or 70° F. The mean annual temperature at the city of Buenos Aires is about 65°. The highest maximum temperature is probably found over the plains of the Argentine Republic, where the mercury has been known to mark 111°-113° in the shade. The climate of the southern Patagonian region is almost subarctic in its severity, and boisterous and biting winds are very frequent. Along the southern coast of Chile, which receives the attack of the northwardly trending Antarctic or austral current, low temperatures prevail.

Flora.—This continent is remarkable for the magnitude of its forests, which are estimated to cover two-thirds of its surface. The basin of the Amazon and the upper part of that of the Paraná are rich beyond description in forest vegetation. Palms and melastomes are among its most characteristic forms. The magnificent evergreen trees are covered, festooned, and draped with parasitical creepers, air-plants, and twining plants (orchideae, tillandsias, lianas, etc.), and many of them are adorned to their summits with most brilliant flowers. And yet it is probably true, as Wallace has carefully pointed out, that the display of flowers, even in this region of most exuberant vegetation, is less accentuated than in many parts of the north temperate zone. There is nothing to replace the lowland floral vegetation of the daisy, clover, dandelion, or poppy field. Among the valuable trees are the cinchona, or quinine, which grows in dense associations along the more elevated eastern slopes of the Andes of Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador; the rubber or fig, constituting some of the more distinctive types of vegetation of the primeval forest of Amazonia; the brazil-wood, rosewood, cow-tree, brazil-nut, Brazilian mahogany, and black-heart. The araucarians, or South American pines, are a part of the vegetation of the Andes, extending almost to the limits of forest growth in the south. The timber-line even of the equatorial Andes is remarkably low, and but few trees, in an arboreal form, reach an altitude exceeding 10,000 feet. At least one species of palm, the wax-palm (Ceroxylon Andicola), extends its home quite to the snow-line.

Among the cultivated products are coffee, sugar, cacao, indigo, maize, the century-plant (Agave Americana), banana, orange, pine-apple, cocoanut, grape, mango, chirimoya, guava, tapioca, vanilla, and the maté, or Paraguay tea. The potato is indigenous to this region, and it still grows wild in parts of Peru. The natives of Bolivia and Peru use large quantities of the narcotic and stimulant coca, the leaf of the Erythroxylon Coca, a shrub which grows in the tropical valleys near the Andes. Among the mountains and table-lands of Peru and Ecuador the fruits and plants of the temperate zone flourish under the equator. Grain is cultivated at elevations of 10,000-12,000 feet.

Fauna.—The fauna of South America, the Neotropical of zoögeographers, is richer and more varied than that of any other continental division of the earth's surface. The wealth of types represented by the birds and insects, to which the luxuriant forest affords a never-failing food supply, is especially remarkable. The two most distinctive groups of mammals are the quadrumanes (monkeys) and edentates, or toothless, animals—the ant-eaters, armadillos, and sloths, whose nearest allies are found in the faunas of South Africa and Australia. The monkeys are of the type of the prehensile-tailed, and, with the exception of the small marmosets, or squirrel monkeys, have 36 teeth, as distinguished from the ape of the Old World, with 32 teeth. Their range extends northward into Mexico, to about the 19th parallel of latitude. The jaguar and puma, or cougar, are the largest of the carnivores, the latter being found throughout nearly the whole of the continent. Bears are entirely wanting, except in the north Andean tract. The wolf is also absent, but its place is taken by a number of wild fox-like dogs, which roam over the southern pampas and savannas. Of the hoofed animals the most prominent representatives are the small deer that range through the open country from Venezuela to Patagonia; the tapir and peccary, mostly of the lowland forest region; and the llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña, inhabiting the high mountain regions of the Cordilleras, and which represent the camels of the Old World. There are no antelopes and no indigenous horses, cattle, sheep, or goats.

The birds are largely of brilliant plumage, and comprise among other forms an immense variety of parrots, humming-birds, toucans, tanagers (which replace the fringilline birds of the north), sugar-birds, troupials, manikins (with the beautiful cock-of-the-rock), and chatterers (ootings, bell-bird). The almost cosmopolitan crow and raven are all but entirely absent, being replaced by the type of the fruit-crows. Of the birds of prey may be mentioned the condor of the Andes, the largest of all the raptorial birds, and distinguished for its wonderful power of flight, and the Brazilian harpy-eagle. Two or three species of struthious birds, representing the ostrich of Africa and western Asia, inhabit the plains of the southern half of the continent. Reptiles are very numerous, and they comprise among other forms the alligator, crocodile, iguana, boa, anaconda, rattlesnake, and jararaca, the last, one of the most venomous of all serpents. Upward of 2000 species or varieties of fishes are known from the Amazon alone, many of which are of a marine type. The largest of all fresh-water fishes is the giant piragua.

Geology and Minerals.—The most distinctive geological elements of the continent are the comparatively recent Andean mountains, whose final elevation in the middle or late Tertiary period appears to have been almost coeval with the main upheaval of the Alps; the ancient, battered, and profoundly eroded Highlands of eastern Brazil, whose existence evidently dates back, in part at least, to the Archæan or Laurentian epoch; the pampean plains, a recently exposed oceanic or lacustrine floor; and the Amazonian bottom-land, the successor to a vast Atlantic gulf, which has progressively been filled in by the detritus carried into it by the Amazon and its tributaries, and which largely represents materials of destruction derived from the Andes. In the Pampean Formation, of Pliocene or Post-Pliocene age, have been found many remains of giant edentate animals, megatherium, mylodon, megalonyx, glyptodon, which may perhaps justly be considered to represent ancestral types of some of the edentate animals inhabiting the region to-day. Nor is it unlikely that man himself already existed in association with some of these animals, as well as with the mastodon and mammoth, which are also a part of the extinct South American fauna.

Rich mines of precious metals are found in various parts of South America, especially in Bolivia, Chile, Peru, and Brazil. The silver-mines of Potosí (Bolivia) and Copiapó (Chile) have long been celebrated, and the latter country has also been largely productive of copper. Gold is found in many parts, and has been actively mined from the west coast of Colombia to Venezuela and Guiana. Extensive coal and iron deposits are a part of the mineral resources of Brazil, which has also for many years been an extensive producer of diamonds. Emeralds of purest quality are found in Colombia and Venezuela.

Population and Races.—The ruling classes in all the South American countries are descendants of Spaniards, except in the case of Brazil, whose rulers are of Portuguese descent, and in that of British, French, and Dutch Guiana. A large portion of the population is a mixed race of Spanish (or Portuguese) and Indian parentage. The aboriginal inhabitants, as in North America, are Indians, of which there are numerous tribes or stocks, speaking largely dissimilar but related languages. They are, as a rule, of a less warlike habit than their northern congeners, but some of the tribes of the Amazon and Orinoco basins, as well as the southern Aracuanians, lack little in this regard. The differentiation of language would seem to indicate long periods of time since the first settlement, but little positive is known regarding the primal home of these people, or even of the avenues of their incoming. The pampas are inhabited by a rude and turbulent people called the Gauchos, who are mestizos, or half-breeds. Negroes and mulattoes, descended from slaves imported from Africa, constitute a large element in the population of Brazil. A remarkable ancient, or at least prehistoric, civilization is indicated in the colossal ruins of the Andean plateaus of Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador, which have been described as being "unrivalled for size and exquisite finish, except in Egypt and Babel." They are associated mainly with the Bolivian Aymaras and the Quichuas, of Peru, whose dominant tribe was that of the Incas.

History.—South America was discovered by Christopher Columbus on his third voyage, in 1498. He landed near the mouth of the Orinoco River. Alonso de Ojeda, a Spaniard, accompanied by Amerigo Vespucci, explored the northern coasts in 1499. Vespucci published a narrative of this voyage. Vicente Yañes Pinzon, a Spaniard, and Cabral, a Portuguese navigator, discovered Brazil independently in 1500. In 1513, Vasco Núñez de Balboa crossed the Isthmus of Darien and discovered the Pacific Ocean. In 1520, Magellan (Magalhães) sailed through the straits now bearing his name. The Spaniards conquered nearly all parts of South America except Brazil, which was subject to the King of Portugal until 1822, when an independent empire was established. The Spanish colonies revolted in 1810, and waged a long war of independence against the royalist Spanish armies, which were finally driven from the field in 1826.

America, in Nicaragua, near the mouth of the San Juan River, lying W. of Greytown.

America, a post-village of Walker co., Ala. Pop. about 150.

America, a post-hamlet of Sonoma co., Cal., 30 miles N. of Santa Rosa.

America, a post-hamlet of Pulaski co., Ill., 12 miles N. by E. of Cairo.

Amicalo'la, a post-station of Dawson co., Ga.

Amicu, ā-me-koo', or Amucuu, ā-moo-koo', a described lake of South America, near the common frontier of Brazil and British Guiana, between the rivers Rapununy and Takutu. The country of this lake was the El Dorado of the days of Queen Elizabeth. It was known as "the great lake with golden banks;" and within a few miles of it was supposed to stand the far-famed, imperial, and golden city of Manoa, the object of the unfortunate expedition of Sir Walter Raleigh.

Amidā, ā'mī-dā, an ancient city, on the site of which is DIARBEEK.

Amiens, am'e-ens (Fr. pron. ā'mē-ān'; anc. Samarobriva, afterwards Ambia'ni), a town of France, capital of the department of Somme (Picardy), 84 miles N. of Paris, on the Somme, whose numerous canals within the town afford great facilities for manufacturing. It was once a place of strength, but its ramparts have been replaced by boulevards, which encircle the town. Amiens is divided into the upper and the lower town. The former has wide and regular streets, with houses built on a uniform plan. The latter has narrow streets, and is throughout so intersected by the ramifications of the Somme, and the numerous bridges over them, as to have made Louis XI. give it the name of "little Venice." The most conspicuous edifice of Amiens is its cathedral, one of the most magnificent in Europe, founded in 1220. It is 470 feet in length, with a transept 213 feet across. Other buildings of note are the Hôtel de Ville, Palais de Justice, the Hôtel-Dieu, or general hospital, the museum of art and antiquities (Musée de Picardie), and the Bibliothèque Communale, a handsome edifice, with a peristyle of Doric columns, and a library of nearly 100,000 volumes. Amiens has various learned societies and is a literary centre of considerable importance. There is a preparatory school of medicine and pharmacy. It is a bishop's see. Amiens has extensive manufactures of cotton velvet, kerseymere, serges, plush, druggist, cambrie, tapestry, cotton and linen fabrics, merinos, silks, machinery, chemicals, beet-sugar, paper, milliners' goods, confections, etc. The spinning of flax and worsted is also one of the great staples of Amiens. The Peace of Amiens between England, on one side, and France, on the other, was concluded March 27, 1802. Pop. in 1901, 85,297; of the commune, 90,768.

Amiens, a post-village in Middlesex co., Ontario, 6 miles NW. of Strathroy.

Amikirrima, ā'mē-kēer-ree'mā, or Kerama, kā-rā'mā (Chinese, Kwāi-shan, koo'mē-shān'; Jap. Kumiya-ma, koo'mē-yā'mā), a group of small fertile and populous islets, 25 miles SW. of Great Liu-kiu Island.

Amirante (am'e-rant') Islands (Port. Ilhas do Almirante, eel'yās do āl-mē-rān'tā,—i.e., "Admiral's Islands"), an archipelago in the Indian Ocean, SW. of the Seychelles. Lat. about 5° 30' S.; lon. 53° 10' E. They consist of two groups of small islands, united by banks of sand and coral, and are claimed by Great Britain as a dependency of the colony of Mauritius. They have a population of about 100 (mixed negroes and whites), and are mainly visited for their turtle fisheries.

Amis, a post-village of Hawkins co., Tenn., 4 miles E. of Rogersville, its banking point. Pop. about 250.

A'mish, a post-village of Johnson co., Iowa, 16 miles SW. of Iowa City.

Amisia and Amisius, ancient names of Ems.

Amisville, ā'mis-vil, a post-village of Rappahannock co., Va., 12 miles W. of Warrenton and about 100 miles N. by W. of Richmond.

Amisus, an ancient city of Pontus. See SAMSUN.

Amite, am-ēt', a river which rises in the SW. part of Mississippi and passes into Louisiana. Its general direction is southward, but after forming the boundary between East Baton Rouge and Livingston parishes it runs eastward until it enters Lake Maurepas. Length, about 100 miles. It is navigable for small steamboats for 50 miles.

Amite, a county in the SW. part of Mississippi, bordering on Louisiana, has an area of 798 sq. m. It is intersected by the Amite River, and bounded on the NW. by the Homochitto. Capital, Liberty. Pop. in 1890, 18,198; in 1900, 20,708.

Amite, a banking post-town, the capital of Tangipahoa parish, La., on the Tangipahoa River and on the Illinois Central R., 68 miles NNW. of New Orleans. It has manufactures of cotton-gins. Pop. in 1900, 1547.

Amitemum, an ancient town in Italy, 3 miles NE. of Aquila. It was the birthplace of Sallust.

Amity, a post-village of Clarke co., Ark., on the Fourche Caddo, 28 miles NW. of Arkadelphia, which is its railroad and banking town. It has saw-mills and a cotton-gin. Pop. of the township in 1900, 1400.

Amity, a post-village of Prowers co., Colo., on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé R. Pop. about 300.

Amity, a post-village of Johnson co., Ind., on Sugar Creek and on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis R., 25 miles S. by E. of Indianapolis.

Amity, a post-hamlet of Scott co., Iowa, about 13 miles NW. of Davenport. Pop. 80.

Amity, a post-township (town) of Aroostook co., Me., 16 miles S. of Houlton. Pop. in 1900, 404.

Amity, a banking post-village of Dekalb co., Mo., on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 5 miles W. of Maysville and 25 miles E. by N. of St. Joseph. Pop. 160.

Amity, a township (town) of Allegany co., N.Y., includes Belmont. Pop. in 1900, 2216.

Amity, a post-village of Orange co., N.Y., near Pine Island Station, and 30 miles SW. of Newburg. Tourmaline, epidote, corundum, spinel, and other minerals are found here. Pop. about 100.

Amity, a post-station of Iredell co., N.C., 6 miles from Troutman's Station.

The name is a corruption of the Chinese word Hiamen. It is situated at the S. end of the island, at the mouth of two united rivers, one of which communicates with the populous city of Chang-chu-fu, and its harbor is one of the best on the Pacific. The streets are narrow and dirty, but many of the buildings are of great size. The foreign imports comprise cotton, cotton goods, cotton yarn, opium, metals, clocks, betel-nut, indigo, pepper, rattans, rice, grain, etc. The native exports are tea, camphor, opium, sugar, sugar-candy, gold-leaf, earthenware, paper umbrellas, paper, joss-paper, grass-cloth, etc. The place has lost its prominence as a centre of the tea trade. Amoy was captured by the British in 1841, and by the treaty of Nanking, 1842, this port, with others, was opened to their trade. A supplementary treaty, in 1843, established a tariff and admitted other foreigners to the same privileges as British subjects. The population—mostly employed in the coasting trade—was in 1897, 96,370; of the island, about 400,000.

Amrili, am-ree'le, or Umrili, üm-ree'le, a walled town of the Gaikwar's dominions, British India, on the Kathiwar peninsula, 130 miles SW. of Ahmedabad. Estimated pop. about 15,000.

Am'riswil, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Thurgau, 10 miles from Constance. Pop. in 1900, 3469.

Amritsar, am-rit'sar, or Amrit'sir, written also Umritsir, üm-rit'sir, a city of British India, capital of a district of the Punjab, in the Bari Doab, 33 miles E. of Lahore and 330 miles by rail NW. of Delhi. Lat. 31° 37' 30" N.; lon. 74° 56' E. The shops and bazaars exhibit, in great abundance, the richest products of India. Amritsar has long been celebrated as a holy place of the Sikhs, possessing a sacred temple situated on an island in the centre of a reservoir or tank about 150 paces square, constructed in 1581 by Ram Das, the fourth spiritual leader of the Sikhs, who gave to the work the name of "Amrita Saras," or "fount of immortality." But the most remarkable object in the town is the large fortress built by Runjeet Singh, surrounded by a deep ditch of about 2 miles' circuit. A canal was constructed by the same ruler from Amritsar to the Ravi, a distance of about 30 miles. The staple manufactures are shawls (imitations of Kashmir shawls), silks, and woollen and cotton cloths. Amritsar is the leading trading-place in the Punjab. Pop. in 1901, 162,548.

Amrua, am-roo'á, Amroha, or Umrohah, üm-ro'á, a town of Rohilkund, British India (United Provinces of Agra and Oudh), district and 20 miles NNW. of Moradabad. Pop. about 85,000.

Amstel, äm'stel, a small river of the Netherlands, North Holland, formed by the union of the Dreicht and the Mydreicht, traverses the city of Amsterdam, and enters its harbor after a northward course of about 10 miles.

Amstelveen, äm'stel-vain' ("turf or turf-lands of the Amstel"), a village of North Holland, near the Amstel, 5 miles SSW. of Amsterdam.

Am'sterdam (Dutch pron. äm'ster-däm'), formerly Amstelredamme, or Amsteldamme (the "dike or dam of the Amstel," L. Amstelodamum), the commercial capital of the kingdom of the Netherlands, in North Holland, at the former confluence of the Amstel with the Y, a lake-like arm of the Zuider Zee, which has been converted into an excellent harbor, and whose waters have been directed into a central canal, traversing the peninsula of North Holland and giving to the city a port on the North Sea. This great North Sea ship-canal is 15 miles long, 65 to 110 yards in width, and 30 feet in depth. Its level lies 20 inches below the general level of the Amsterdam waters. The cost of construction, inclusive of the protecting dikes, was about 40,000,000 florins. Smaller vessels reach Amsterdam by the canal from the Helder, or may pass the locks in the great dam of the Y, entering from the Zuider Zee. The city is the terminus of important railways and canals. Lat. 52° 22' 5" N.; lon. 4° 53' 2" E. It is the largest and most important town in Holland, constitutionally its capital, although the residence of the sovereign is at the Hague. Amsterdam stands on soft, wet ground, under which, at the depth of from 20 to 50 feet, is a bed of sand. All of the buildings are reared on piles driven into this sand. In the centre of most of the streets, many of which display shops of great elegance and are the focus of a busy life, is a canal, either side of which is lined with broad, brick-paved quays, with rows of trees. The Kalver Straat is one of the chief thoroughfares, and exhibits the activity of the city in a most marked and picturesque degree. The city is cut up into 90 islands by the canals (Grachten), over which there are about 300 bridges, generally with a draw in the centre. The Singel-Gracht, upward of six miles in length, separates the old, semicircular town from the new quarters which have developed during the last 30 years. The vessels to be seen in all parts of the city, loading and unloading and passing along the canals, the lifting and lowering of drawbridges, the transit of merchandise on sledges, and the general stir of business give the streets of Amsterdam an air of most striking animation.

Among the most remarkable buildings is the Royal Palace (Het Paleis), formerly the town-hall, and completed in 1655. It is a stone edifice, in the form of a parallelogram, 262 feet long, 206 feet broad, and 108 feet high, resting on 13,650 piles driven 70 feet into the ground. It contains a great hall, 117 feet long, 57 feet wide, and 100 feet high, lined with white Italian marble. The new Stadthuis, the Bourse, the Rijks Museum (constructed in 1877-85, and covering nearly 3 acres of ground, with magnificent collections of art and manufacture and the finest picture-galleries in Holland after those of the Hague), Municipal Museum (1892-95), Fodor Museum, and Six Museum are noteworthy structures. The numerous docks and basins are an interesting feature of the city. The New Church (Nieuwe Kerk), founded in 1408, is 350 feet long by 210 feet wide across the transepts. It contains the tombs of Admiral De Ruyter, of the poet Vondel, and of other notables. The Old Church (Oude Kerk), founded about 1300, contains the tombs of several Dutch admirals and an organ said to be second only to that of Haarlem. Amsterdam is remarkable for the number and excellence of its benevolent and charitable institutions.

It possesses many excellent educational institutions, both of a general and a special kind. Among them may be named the University, with about 80 professors and docents and a library of 100,000 printed volumes, the Royal Academy of Sciences, Royal Academy of Fine Arts, school of navigation, aquarium, botanical garden, and zoological garden. The last-named covers 28 acres, and is one of the richest zoological gardens of Europe.

The industries of Amsterdam include the manufacture of linen, silk, velvets, thread, porcelain, print-goods, chemicals (cobalt-blue), tobacco, candles, chocolate, soap, oil, canvas, cordage, steam-engines and machinery, the refining of salt, sugar, camphor, and other substances, glass-blowing, brewing and distilling, and ship-building. Its lapidary work is especially famous. About 10,000 workmen are employed in the trade of diamond polishing, to which 70 mills are devoted. Amsterdam ranks much higher as a trading than as a manufacturing town. Its commerce is immense, and its exchange is one of the chief commercial centres of the world. It is a great emporium for butter, cheese, provisions, tobacco, sugar, rice, spices, gin, fish, and manufactured goods of every class. Although over 1600 ships, mainly steamers, enter and clear the port annually, Amsterdam is far behind Rotterdam in its transit-trade. The city is, however, the chief money-market of Holland, and the Bank of the Netherlands is one of the foremost financial institutions of Europe.

Early in the thirteenth century Amsterdam was a mere fishing-village, with a small castle, the residence of the lords of Amstel. Towards the middle of that century it was constituted a town. The decline of Antwerp after the siege of 1584-85, and the shutting of the navigation of the Scheldt in 1648, were the means of raising Amsterdam to the rank, which it long retained, of the first commercial city in Europe. Pop. in 1890, 417,539; in 1900, 510,850, of which number 80,000 were Roman Catholics and 35,000 Jews.

Amsterdam, a village of Decatur co., Ga., with large tobacco interests. The banking point is Bainbridge.

Amsterdam, a banking post-town of Bates co., Mo., 62 miles S. of Kansas City. Pop. in 1900, 142.

Amsterdam, a city of Montgomery co., N.Y., on the Mohawk River and on the New York Central and Hudson River and the West Shore Rrs., 33 miles NW. of Albany. It has manufactures of carpets, knit goods, woollens, silks, brooms, springs, and various other articles. The St. Mary's Catholic Institute is located here. Pop. in 1890, 17,336; in 1900, 20,929.

Amsterdam, a post-village of Jefferson co., Ohio, about 36 miles SE. of Canton.

Amsterdam, a post-village of Botetourt co., Va.

Amsterdam (or New Amsterdam) Island, in the Indian Ocean, about 60 miles N. of the island of St. Paul. It is 4½ miles in length, 2½ miles in breadth, 2760 feet in elevation, and evidently the crater of an extinct volcano, having numerous hot springs.

Amstetten, Am'stét'ten, a village of Upper Austria, near the Ips (Ybbs), 28 miles by rail ESE. of Linz. Pop. in 1900, 5668.

Amt-Gehren, a town of Germany. See GEHREN.

Amtzell, Am'tsèll, a village and castle of Württemberg, circle of the Danube, 4 miles WNW. of Wangen.

Amu-Darya, â-moo' dar'yâ (Persian, Jihun, sometimes written Gihon; anc. Oxus, remotely allied to Waken, a native name for this stream), a great river of central Asia, in Turkestan, rises on the Pamir plateau in two head-streams, the Ab-i-Panj (with its upper part known as the Pamir River) and the Murghab or Ak-Su, the former originating in Victoria Lake (Gas-kul, elevation 13,980 feet) and the latter in the Chak-mak-kul (also known as Gas-kul, 13,850 ft.). The two branches enclose a large part of the Pamir plateau, and unite at Wamar (elevation about 6550 ft.). For some distance beyond Wamar the river forms the boundary between Bokhara and Afghanistan, and then takes a generally NW. course to the Sea of Aral, into which it discharges through two main channels. The Amu-Darya is a broad and rapid stream, but is navigable for a large part of its course, there being but few obstructions, save the winter ice. Its width in the middle course varies from 350 to 570 metres, and it has a depth of water of from 2 to 8 metres. The waters begin to rise in April, and overspread vast extents of territory. Numerous irrigating channels are given off from the main stream in the region of Khiva. Steamboat navigation has been established on some portions of the lower course. At Toharjui the river is crossed by the Central Asiatic or Transcasian railway. For a long time geographers had assumed that the ancient course of the Amu was directed to the Caspian Sea instead of to the Aral, following the Aralo-Caspian depression known as the Uzboi—a condition that was affirmed by the Arabian and Persian geographers as late as the fifteenth century. The very recent researches of Glukhovski and others, however, disprove this supposition. Length of the river, about 1500 miles.

Amu-Darya, a district of Russian Turkestan, bounded SW. by the Amu-Darya. Area, about 42,850 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 193,568. In 1873 this region was ceded to Russia by the Khan of Khiva.

Amukta, Amuchta, or Amoughta, â-moor'tâ, one of the Aleutian Islands, Fox group, with volcanic peaks. Lat. of the centre, 52° 33' N.; lon. 170° 45' W.

Amul, Philippine Islands. See AMBIL.

Amulgawein, â-mûl-gâ-wân, a town of Arabia, at the entrance of the Persian Gulf.

Amur, or AMOUR, â-moor' (Manchu, Sakhalin-Ula), a river of eastern Asia, formed in lat. 53° 20' N., lon. 121° 28' E., by the union of the Argun and Shilka, westward of the Khingan Mountains. It follows a generally eastward course as the boundary between the Amur province and Manchuria, and then turns northward, discharging into the gulf or channel of Saghalin below the fortress of Nikolayevsk, in lat. 52° 57' N. and lon. 141° E. Its course is largely through desolate plains and prairie, elsewhere across heavily forested tracts, spreading out into an island-studded sea, of which the opposing banks are hardly visible. In the passage of the Bureya Mountains the stream has a contracted channel of only 2000 feet. The Amur is navigable throughout its entire course, upward of 1600 miles, and the Shilka, for steam-craft of light draught, for a further distance of about 300 miles, to Mitrofanova (above Stretensk, the terminus of the Baikal-Amur branch of the Transiberian railway). The chief tributaries of the Amur are from the N. the Zeya and Bureya, and from the S. the Sungari and Ussuri. The more important towns situated on its banks are Blagovieshtchensk, Aigun (in Manchuria), Khabarovsk, and Mariinsk. The total length of the river, inclusive of the Argun branch, is approximately 2680 miles. It is thus one of the great rivers of the globe.

Amur, a province of Asiatic Russia, in Siberia, bounded NW. and N. by the province of Yakutsk, E. by the Coast Province (Primorsk), and S. by Manchuria, from which it is separated by the Amur River; it touches the province of Transbaikalia in the extreme W. It is traversed by branches of the Yablonoi and Khingai Mountains, and is watered by the Amur and its tributaries. It has fertile valleys, and produces excellent timber and furs of fine quality. Gold and other metals abound, and the former is very extensively mined, employing over 6000 people in the washings. Capital, Blagovieshtchensk. Area, 172,800 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 118,570, of whom 23,000 were Cossacks, 40,000 Russian settlers or peasants, and 25,000 urban residents. The region was ceded by China to Russia in 1858.

Amur, Territory or General-Government of, in Asiatic Russia, consisting of the three provinces of Amur, Transbaikalia, and the Coast Province (Primorsk), inclusive of the island of Saghalin. Area, about 1,150,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 1,031,364. Capital, Khabarovsk.

Amurang, â-moo-rang', a bay and village of the island of Celebes. The bay is on the NW. coast, and is about 14 miles long inland and 6 miles broad. The village lies at the head of the bay, 25 miles SW. of Menado.

Anatolia, an-á-to'le-á (Turk. Anado'li, from the Greek Ἀνατολή, Anatolē,—i. e., the "rising," "Orient," or "East"), a name given to the peninsula forming the W. extremity of Asia, and in its usual application identical with Asia Minor. Anatolia (with the neighboring islands) comprises the Turkish vilayets of Brusa (Khodavendikyar), Aidin (Smyrna), Konieh, Adana, Angora, Kastamuni, Sivas, Trebisond, and the Archipelago, and the districts of Ismid and Biga. Anatolia proper is included between the 36th and 42d parallels of N. lat. and between the 26th and 42d meridians of E. lon. It is bounded N. by the Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, and the Dardanelles; W. by the Grecian Archipelago; and S. by the Mediterranean Sea; its eastern boundary, which is rather arbitrary, is usually defined by a line connecting the Alma-Dagh, near the Bay of Iskanderun (Alexandretta), with the Euphrates, and thence extending up to its source, whence it runs down the Tchoruk to the Black Sea. Estimated area, about 200,300 sq. m. The N. coast, facing the Black Sea, is bold and steep, but gradually falls as it approaches the Bosphorus. The W. coast has high and precipitous cliffs, and includes the Gulfs of Adramyti, Fuges, Smyrna, Scala Nova, Mendelia, and Cos, while the E. coast presents as its chief bays or indentations the Gulfs of Makri, Phineka, Adalia, and Iskanderun.

The surface may be termed an elevated plateau dotted with salt lakes, and enclosed by two ranges or offshoots of the Armenian and Kurdistan mountain-systems, the Taurus running E. and W. not far from the shores of the Mediterranean and a range skirting the shores of the Black Sea. The southern range, or Taurus, commences close to the Euphrates, where it reaches an elevation of about 10,000 feet, and, running W. with a very irregular course, terminates in the islands of the Grecian Archipelago. It has numerous offsets, which are known by special names, as Alah-Dagh, Bulghar-Dagh, Anti-Taurus, etc. The northern coast range stretches from the Tchoruk W., and terminates at the Bosphorus. Among the best known of its summits are the Keshish-Dagh, SE. of Brusa; the ancient (Asiatic) Mount Olympus (8200 feet), and the Kas-Dagh, Mount Ida (5800 ft.), in the extreme W., overlooking the plain of Troy. Between the two main ranges there are many smaller ones, some of which attain a great elevation; and, indeed, everywhere lofty mountain-masses, more or less connected, are to be met with. Mount Argæus, or Arjish-Dagh, an extinct volcano, near Kaisariyeh, is 13,300 feet, and is seemingly the loftiest summit of Anatolia. The centre of the peninsula is an extensive plateau, averaging 3000-4000 feet in height, partly drained by the rivers flowing into the Black Sea, but covered also with salt lakes, marshes, and rivers having no visible outlets. The largest rivers of Anatolia flow into the Black Sea. Of such are the Kizil-Irmak (anc. Ha'tye), the Yeshil-Irmak (anc. Prie), and the Sakaria (anc. Sanga'rius). The only important rivers flowing towards the Grecian Archipelago are the Sarabat (anc. Her'mus) and the Menderes (anc. Maan'der). The largest of the lakes is the Tuz-Göl, or "Salt Lake," a brackish water situated nearly in the centre of the plateau, at an elevation of 3080 feet; it measures about 50 miles in length.

Much of the coast mountains is of very ancient date, constructed of Paleozoic strata, with newer formations towards the interior, but the central plateau itself is largely of volcanic formation, with vast sheet deposits of trap and trachyte and great numbers of modern or recent cones. Earthquakes are still fairly abundant. Anatolia contains numerous thermal and sulphurous springs. Marble exists in great abundance, an advantage which the sculptors and builders among the early Greek colonists turned largely to account. Coal has been discovered along the coast of the Black Sea; copper, galena, and manganese occur in various parts. Rock-salt and petroleum are also found; meerschaum is extensively quarried, especially on the southern slopes of Olympus.

The climate admits of no general description, owing to the diversity in the elevation of the surface. The W. shores have been celebrated in all ages for their genial warmth. The coast facing the Black Sea is almost equally favored as to temperature, and enjoys the additional advantage of frequent rains. The elevated plains of the interior are extremely cold in winter. Tchihatcheff has likened the winter climate of Kaisariyeh to that of Amsterdam, and its summer climate to that of Toulouse. The most favored areas of precipitation receive only 23 inches of annual rainfall.

The N. slope of the central plateau abounds with forests of walnut, box, oak, beech, plane, ash, and other timber. Sugar-cane, the vine, olives, cotton, silk, tobacco, poppy, rhubarb, and figs are abundantly raised in the valleys of the S., and there is an extensive cultivation of the commoner grains. The flora of western and southern Anatolia is extremely beautiful, and will bear comparison with that of Sicily and the S. of Spain. Shrubs and evergreens are abundant,—the latter including the myrtle, which here attains an immense size, bay, daphne, laurel, and a variety of holly. Some of the vast and frigid plains of the interior produce only stunted shrubs, saline plants, wormwood, sage, and other members of the steppe flora. The higher mountain summits are covered with fir and cedar.

Wheat, boxwood, salt fish, various fruits, barley, millet, sesame, rags, oil, cattle, mohair, wool, opium, scammony, hides, galls, oil-seeds, tragacanth, wax, tobacco, and soap are leading articles of export. Garden vegetables are extensively grown.

Of the more prominent forms of the indigenous fauna of Anatolia may be mentioned the striped hyena, jackal, corsac, leopard, lion, caracal, bear, zorilla, various gazelles, and steppe-rodents. Zoögeographically the region is one uniting Europe, Asia, and Africa.

The Ottoman Turks form the great bulk of the population. The remainder is made up mainly of Greeks, Armenians, Kurds, Jews, and Gypsies. The total population is estimated to be between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000. Agriculture is in the most rude and primitive state. Roads, as understood in Europe, were until recently unknown, but relays of horses were maintained at distant intervals and stationed at the large towns on the leading routes. At the present time there are numerous good roads, and the railroad service is being extended along several lines into the interior. The principal cities of Anatolia are Smyrna, Brusa, Adana, Trebizond, Alexandretta or Iskanderun, Mersina, Adramyti, Angora, Sivas, Sinope, Samsun, Konieh, Kaisariyeh, and Afun-Karahissar.

ANDERMATT, ân'der-mât', or URSEREN, oor'se-rên (It. Orsera), a village of Switzerland, in the valley of Urseren, 18 miles S. of Altdorf. It lies in a treeless neighborhood, at an elevation of 4738 feet above the sea, and is much visited by tourists who traverse the road to gain the Furka Pass. Near it is the Devil's Bridge, crossing the Reuss, and forming part of the route across the St. Gothard into Italy. Pop. about 800.

ANDERNACH, ân'der-nâk (anc. Antenacum or Antoniacum), a town of Prussia, on the Rhine, 10 miles NW. of Coblenz. It retains its old walls and crooked streets, and has interesting churches and structures dating from the Middle Ages, when it was a flourishing town. The vicinity abounds in Roman remains. Pop. in 1900, 7889.

ANDERSON, a county in the E. part of Kansas, has an area of 576 sq. m. It is drained by Pottawatomie Creek. Garnett is the county seat. Coal is found here. Pop. in 1890, 14,203; in 1900, 13,938.

ANDERSON, a county in the north-central part of Kentucky, has an area of 224 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by the navigable Kentucky River and is intersected by Salt River. Capital, Lawrenceburg. Pop. in 1890, 10,610; in 1900, 10,051.

ANDERSON, a county in the NW. part of South Carolina, has an area of 756 sq. m. It is bounded on the NE. by the Saluda River and on the SW. by the Savannah River. It is also intersected by the Kiowee River. Capital, Anderson. Pop. in 1890, 43,696; in 1900, 55,728.

ANDERSON, a county of Tennessee, has an area of 350 sq. m. It is intersected by Clinch River and also drained by Powell's River. The surface is partly occupied by the Cumberland Mountains. Coal and salt-springs are found here. County seat, Clinton. Pop. in 1890, 15,128; in 1900, 17,634.

ANDERSON, a county in the east-central part of Texas, has an area of 1060 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by the Neches River and on the W. by the Trinity River, which is navigable by steamboats. Palestine is the county seat. Pop. in 1890, 20,923; in 1900, 23,015.

ANDERSON, a post-town of Shasta co., Cal., on the Southern Pacific R., 11 miles SE. of Redding, its banking point. It is situated in a fine fruit-growing region, and gold and silver are mined in the vicinity. Pop. in 1900, 508.

ANDERSON, a post-hamlet of Washington co., Fla.

ANDERSON, a city and railroad centre, the capital of Madison co., Ind., is on the west fork of the White River, at the convergence of several railroads, 35 miles NE. of Indianapolis. It has manufactures of iron, steel, brass, wire, paper, glass, machinery, lumber, etc. Pop. in 1890, 10,741; in 1900, 20,178.

Anderson, a post-village of Fremont co., Iowa, 3 miles N. of Sidney, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Anderson, a post-village of Livingston co., Mich., on the Grand Trunk R., 3 miles (direct) W. of Pinckney, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Anderson, a post-village of McDonald co., Mo., 7 miles S. of Wade and 21 miles S. of Neosho, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Anderson, a post-village of Warren co., N.J., 1 mile from Port Murray Station. Pop. about 150.

Anderson, a post-village of Ross co., Ohio, on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern R., 9 miles NW. of Chillicothe.

Anderson, a banking city, capital of Anderson co., S.C., on the Blue Ridge and the Southern R., 126 miles WNW. of Columbia. It has cotton-, cotton-seed oil, and fertilizer-industries, and the Patrick Military Institute and Anderson Female College. Pop. in 1900, 5498.

Anderson, a post-village of Franklin co., Tenn., on the Nashville and Chattanooga R., 49 miles W. of Chattanooga. Pop. 80.

Anderson, a post-village, capital of Grimes co., Tex., 10 miles NE. of Navasota, its banking town, and 68 miles NNW. of Houston. Pop. 600.

Andersonburg, a post-village of Perry co., Pa., about 20 miles NW. of Carlisle.

Anderson, Cape, the E. point of the island of St. Lawrence, at the entrance of Bering Strait. Lat. 63° N.; lon. 168° 30' W.

Anderson Court-House. See ANDERSON, S.C.

Anderson Island, Alaska. See SAINT LAWRENCE.

Anderson River, in British Columbia, enters the Fraser, from the E., 20 miles above Yale.

Anderson's Creek, of Indiana, rises in Crawford co., and forms the boundary between Spencer and Perry cos. until it falls into the Ohio near Troy.

Anderson's Creek, of Clearfield co., Pa., enters the W. branch of Susquehanna River.

Anderson's Ferry, a station in Hamilton co., Ohio, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis R. and on the Ohio River, 6 miles below Cincinnati.

Anderson's Inlet, or Venus Bay, in Victoria, Australia, N. of Bass Strait, between Capes Liptrap and Patterson, receives Tarwin River.

Andersons Mills, a post-station of Pickens co., S.C.

Anderson's Springs, a resort of Lake co., Cal., 10 miles from the Geysers and about 80 miles N. of San Francisco. Elevation, 1950 feet above the sea.

An'dersontown, a post-hamlet of Caroline co., Md., 45 miles E. by S. of Annapolis.

Andersontown, a post-village of York co., Pa.

An'dersonville, a post-village of Sumter co., Ga., on the Central R. of Georgia, 60 miles SW. of Macon. Here many Union prisoners were confined in the civil war. The prison-grounds are now a park. Pop. 245.

Andersonville, a post-village of Franklin co., Ind., 54 miles ESE. of Indianapolis. Pop. about 400.

Andersonville, N.J. See ANDERSON.

Andersonville, a post-village of Ross co., Ohio, on the Ohio and Erie Canal, 6 miles N. of Chillicothe.

Andersonville, a hamlet of Anderson co., S.C., near the Savannah River, 14 miles WSW. of Anderson Court-House.

Andersonville, a post-village of Anderson co., Tenn., 10 miles NE. of Clinton. Pop. about 120.

Andes, an'dis, a banking post-village of Delaware co., N.Y., in Andes township (town), 12 miles SE. of Delhi and 63 miles SW. of Albany. Pop. in 1900, 365; of the town, 1927. It is traversed by the E. branch of the Delaware River.

Andes, an'dis (Sp. Cordillera de los Andes, kon-dee-ya'râ dà loce an'dée), a range of mountains of such vast extent and altitude as to render it one of the most remarkable physical features of the globe. Commencing at Cape Horn, it extends nearly parallel to the Pacific coast throughout the whole length of South America to the Isthmus of Panama, a distance of about 4500 miles. It was formerly assumed that the Andes were continued through the Isthmus to form part of the main mountain-system of North America, but the evidence indicating this condition is wanting, although it is by no means certain that the dissociation of the two systems has not been brought about by successive breakages and subsidences. The continental divide in the isthmus, which is in part occupied by marine strata of Oligocene (Nummulitic) age, is lowered to 330 feet, but in Nicaragua, westward of the lake of the same name, it is still further reduced to 153 feet, which is the lowest mountain-crossing in the entire tract included within 113 degrees of latitude. From its S. extremity the main chain runs along the W. shore of Tierra del Fuego, and consists of rocky summits, rising in many places to 2000 or 3000 feet, the culminating points of this portion being Mounts Sarmiento and Darwin, respectively 6610 and 6900 feet above the level of the sea. The Patagonian-Chilean Andes, flanked by rocky and mountainous islands in the Pacific,—disrupted parts of the main mountain-mass,—continue in an almost direct S. and N. course to about lat. 33° S., when they undergo an irregular bifurcation, an eastern series of outliers trending north-northeastward to join the Eastern Cordillera, or Cordillera Real, of Bolivia. The great volcanic (extinct) peak of Aconcagua, the culminating point of the entire Western Hemisphere, 23,080 feet, is located near this bifurcation. Recent determinations place its summit in Argentina. Not very distant neighbors of Aconcagua, both of them situated on the boundary-line of Chile and Argentina, are the Mercedario and Tupungato, with elevations in both cases seemingly exceeding 22,000 feet. Between the Chilean Andes and the Pacific—a distance varying from 80 to 150 miles—are extensive plains elevated from 1000 to 1500 feet above the sea. In the S. these are mostly clothed with a rich vegetation; but the more elevated mountain-regions are nearly destitute of plants. The Bolivian Andes, forming the central division of the system, are included roughly between the Tropic of Capricorn and lat. 13° S., and cover a greatest width—including the high table-lands (despoblados, punos, of Potosí, Oruro, etc.), which are held up between the western or coast Cordillera and the so-called Andes proper, or eastern Cordillera, the Cordillera Real—of nearly 450 miles. The plateau of Titicaca, which has an altitude exceeding 12,000 feet, is comparable in its position with the lofty plateaus of central Asia lying north of the Himalaya range. It is flanked on either side by the vast buttresses of the two main Andean chains, to which belong some of the loftiest summits of the continent, such as Sajama, or Sahama (volcanic), in the western chain, 21,000 feet; and Illampu, or Sorata, and Illimani (non-volcanic) in the eastern, with elevations of approximately 21,500 feet (or, according to other determinations, upward of 22,000 feet). These parallel cordilleras are united at various points by enormous transverse groups or by single ranges crossing them like dikes. The descent to the Pacific is ordinarily markedly abrupt; the dip is also very sudden to the E., whence offshoots diverge to the lower plains.

The Peruvian Andes, separated from the Pacific by a desert which is in places 100 miles broad, continue the main chain or chains of the Andes with little diminution in altitude to about lat. 5° S., where the mountains enter Ecuador, and detach two eastern offsets, one of which runs NW. between the Marañón and Huallaga Rivers, and the other between the Huallaga and the Ucayali. This divergence takes place from the knot of the famous Cerro de Pasco, overlooking the lofty plateau of Pasco or Huánuco. The main range runs NNW. in a direction parallel to and about 70–100 miles distant from the Pacific. It presents an unbroken wall to the sea, with rugged and steep declines and a majestic array of snow-clad summits. In its southern part are found the gigantic cones of Misti (volcano of Arequipa) and Chachani, both with elevations of 19,000–20,000 feet.

The Andes of Ecuador are commonly assumed to be composed of two parallel trending chains (as in parts of Peru, Bolivia, and Chile), and to enclose between them the vast upland stretching the greater distance between the knot of Loja, in the south, and that of Pasto, in Colombia, in the north, and having an elevation of upward of 9000 feet. Recent researches have thrown doubt upon this construction, as the following statement by Whymper indicates: "The two parallel cordilleras, which, according to geographers, are the great features of the country, do not exist. The axis of the Andes of Ecuador, part of the backbone of South America, runs nearly north and south; and towards the western edge of the main chain there is a certain sequence of peaks more or less in a line with each other. On the east of these summits there is a succession of basins of different dimensions and of various elevations, and the nearest mountains on the eastern side occur at irregular distances. There is no such thing as one great valley in the interior of Ecuador." In whatever way disposed, the summits overlooking the plateau of Quito present a picture of volcanic activity unrivalled for grandeur and magnificence in the world. Here are located the giants Sangai and Cotopaxi (19,613 feet), both violently active, eruptive, and of almost unceasing activity, Antisana (19,335 feet), Cayambe, Tungurahua, Pichincha, and Chimborazo, the last-named (20,498 feet) overlooking the plain of Riobamba, and for a long time considered to be not only the loftiest summit of the Western Hemisphere, but of the entire globe. All the higher elevations of this group, with the exception of Sara-urou (15,749 feet), are of igneous construction. Vast fields of lava, pumice, and scoriae are scattered over the region, in some places embedding the remains of numerous animals of the Post-Tertiary period, and on all sides the evidences of the internal activity of the earth are grandly exhibited.

The Andes of Colombia have not the full height of those of Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, or Chile, but their culminating points—Tolima, west of Bogotá (18,400 feet), Nevada de Herveo (18,340 feet), Huila, and Ruiz—are still peaks of the first order. The system throughout the greater part of the state consists essentially of three main lines, the western of which is deflected towards the Isthmus of Panama, and the eastern, sometimes known as the Sierra of Suma Paz, northeastward to form the Andes de Mérida, in Venezuela, and the broken coast-chain, which sees a further continuation in the mountains of Trinidad and of some of the islands of the Lesser Antilles. This is the main projection of the Andean system, whose mass has fallen by breakages into the trough of the Atlantic-Caribbean basin. A fork of this chain is continued northward from near Pamplona to form the backbone of the Goajira Peninsula, and has lying to the westward of its northern extremity the famous Sierra Nevada de Santa Marta, an isolated mountain-mass, whose elevation has been variously put between 17,000 and 19,000 or even 20,000 feet. Among the best-known summits of the Venezuelan Andes are the Concha, southeast of Mérida, 15,420 feet, and the Silla de Carás, 8760 feet.

Perhaps the most distinctive feature of the entire Andean system is its unbroken continuity. Throughout its entire extent no stream has succeeded in finding a passage across it from the Atlantic side to the Pacific, so that virtually nearly the entire river-discharge of the South American continent is to the Atlantic basin. Most of the higher summits are volcanic cones, either still active, like the beautifully formed Cotopaxi, or dismantled, like Antisana and the much newer Chimborazo; and for long distances these lofty pinnacles are found only in the western or coast Cordilleras, where they are mostly implanted directly upon the mountain-ridge or crest. The more ancient volcanoes, like Aconcagua, have had their volcanic outlines almost completely effaced. The great Aitar, 17,730 feet, or Capao-uru, is said to have overtopped Chimborazo still in the days of the Spanish Conquest.

This gigantic mountain-chain is traversed in different parts by passes or roads at heights almost equal to those of the extreme summits of the European ranges. Most of these are narrow, steep, and dangerous. The pass from Arequipa to Puno is 14,660 feet high; and the one leading from Lima to Tarma and Pasco is 15,760 feet, being the highest known pass of the Andes. The former of these is now traversed by the railroad uniting Mollendo with Puno, on Lake Titicaca, and the latter by the famous Oroya road, the most remarkable piece of railroad construction in the world. There are numerous other passes across the Andes, many of which exceed 15,000 feet in height. At best, these are as a rule practicable only for mules and llamas, and in many cases the traveller is carried over upon the backs of natives. A great commercial road runs longitudinally along the Andes from Trujillo to Popayán, not much less than 1000 miles. The much-frequented Uspallata Pass, which is on the line of the nearly completed railroad that is to connect Mendoza, in the Argentine Republic, with San Felipe and Valparaiso, in Chile, and crosses the Andes in the immediate neighborhood of Aconcagua, has an elevation of 12,795 feet.

Snow-Line.—The line of perpetual snow in the Andes varies very greatly, according to the latitude, descending to about 4000 feet at the southern extremity of Patagonia, and rising to about 17,000–18,500 feet on the Western Cordillera, at about lat. 15° S. On the line of the equator the position is about 15,500 feet. Except in the southern tracts there are few glaciers of any magnitude, and for a long time it was believed that the equatorial summits were entirely free of glaciation. Cayambe, Cotopaxi, and Chimborazo are, however, all provided with glaciers, the ice-mass on the last named having considerable development.

Vegetation.—Conformable to the extreme range of climatic conditions which prevail in the Andean region, there is a wealth and diversity in the flora which are presented elsewhere only in the Himalaya Mountains. Arctic or subarctic types of plants abound in the vegetation of the south, maintaining themselves, however, far northward along the upper or Alpine crests of the ranges. Along much of the middle western slopes, where rain is largely or wholly wanting, the vegetation is naturally sparse and desolate, wonderfully contrasting with the exuberant floral development which is found on the eastern rain-fed slopes of Peru, Bolivia, and Colombia. It is in this tract, descending deep into the lowlands, that the tropical forest unfolds itself in all its wealth and manifold variety. The cinebora, or quinine, forms part of the mountain woodland of this region. The high puna and paramo tracts, the upland pampas of the mountains, are for most of the hot or dry seasons cheerless in their dearth of green vegetation, but with the return of the rains they rapidly recover the vigor of growth, and give to the eye a beautiful and refreshing display of grass and wild flowers. One of the most distinctive types of vegetation of the Andes is the araucaria, the Chilean or southern pine. The woodland nowhere attains that high level which one should expect to find in a region situated in great part directly in the equatorial tropics. On the plateau of Quito few trees are found at an altitude of 10,000 feet, and the highest, a Poly-lepis, does not appear to pass beyond 12,000 feet. This condition is in marked contrast to what is found on the gigantic volcanoes of Mexico, where the forest trees are still fairly massive at 13,000 or even 13,500 feet. The potato is cultivated in the Andes at an elevation of from 10,000 to 13,000 feet, wheat grows at a height of 10,000 feet or more, and oats ripen on the plateau of Lake Titicaca at an elevation of nearly 13,000 feet. Perhaps the loftiest permanent habitation of man in the world is at Chachani, Peru, 16,600 feet.

Fauna.—The animal life of the Andes is naturally varied, and partakes of the characteristics that belong to the faunas of tropical, temperate, and Alpine regions. No mention can here be made of even the commoner forms of life, beyond the more distinctively Andean llama, alpaca, vicuña, guanaco (all in the condition of domestication), viscacha, and mountain tapir; and among birds, the condor and the numerous forms of humming-bird, many of which are localized in their distribution to individual volcanic peaks. The North American panther, or cougar (puma), finds its way along the whole chain from Colombia to the extremity of Patagonia. No mountain-chain in the world presents such a magnificent avenue for the distant distribution of animal forms as the Andes, and there is none that is so completely a barrier to a transmigration as this one.

Geology.—The geology of the Andes is as yet very imperfectly known, but the main construction appears to be that of a central or nuclear crystalline mass (granites, gneisses, schists) of very ancient, probably Archean, age, and of superimposed sedimentary deposits, which cover nearly all the geological periods from the oldest to the Cretaceous (inclusive). It is made manifest, therefore, that the upheaval of the chain is Post-Cretaceous (in part, probably, late Cretaceous), with a culmination not unlikely in the period, at or near the middle Tertiary, which marked the final great elevation of the Alps and Himalayas. Where the Andes divide into two or more parallel branches the inner of these appears in most cases to be the oldest. The close correspondence between the trend of the western mountain-system and the configuration of the coast-line makes indisputable the relation existing between the two; it may be taken for certain that the making of the mountains was the making of the western border of the South American continent. It may also be accepted as being nearly proved that the making or upheaval of the mountains was in great measure, if not almost entirely, a consequence of the subsidence of the Pacific floor. The Andes both in the north and in the south have undergone marked destruction, to which the islands of the Caribbean basin and of coastal Chile and Patagonia bear imposing testimony, but the full amount of this destruction or disintegration has not yet been ascertained. It would appear that southward the mountain-system was at one time projected quite to the position of Graham Land (Island), and not impossibly it united with an Antarctic continent. The Andes are celebrated for their mineral riches, producing gold, silver, and copper in large quantities, together with platinum, mercury, lead, and iron. The deposits of saltpetre, found principally in the region included between the 18th and 26th parallels of southern latitude, have become commercially very valuable.

Among the most notable ascents of the Andean mountains are those of Chimborazo by Humboldt and Bonpland (partially successful), in 1802; by Boussingault and Hall (partial), in 1831; by Reiss and Stübel (partial), in 1872; and by Whympers and the Carrels, in 1880; of the Pic de Paris, of the Sorata, by Wiener, in 1877; of Cotopaxi, by Thielmann, in 1878, and by Whympers, in 1880; of Aconcagua, by Zurbriggen, in 1897; of Tupungato, by Vines and Zurbriggen, in 1897; of the Sorata (nearly to the summit), by Conway, in 1898; and of Illimani, by Conway, in 1898.

Andes, Los Andes, or Santa Rosa de los Andes, sán'tá rò'sá dà loce àn'dés, a town of Chile, province of Aconcagua, 18 miles by rail E. by S. of San Felipe. Pop. 5504.

Andevuron'to, or Andevurante, àn-de-voo-ràn'tà, a large village on the E. coast of Madagascar, near the mouth of a river of the same name, 60 miles SSW. of Tamatave.

Andijan, ân-dee-jân or ân-dee-shân, a town of Asiatic Russia, in Ferghana, near the Syr-Darya, 73 miles ENE. of Khokan. The town is large and is surrounded with gardens and a moated fort. Pop. in 1897, 46,680. In Dec., 1902, the town was visited by a destructive earthquake, which cost the lives of 1021 of the inhabitants (3342 in the district).

Anding, a post-village of Yasoo co., Miss., on the Illinois Central R., 10 miles (direct) S. of Yasoo City. Pop. 125.

Andkhui, ând-koo'ee, or Ankoi, ân-kô'ee, a town of Afghan Turkistan, capital of the province or oasis of Andkhui, on the N. slope of the Hazara Mountains, about 100 miles W. by N. of Balkh. It is on one of the great commercial routes between Bokhara and Afghanistan. Pop., composed of Suni Mohammedans, about 15,000.

Andlau, ând'lôw, a village of Germany, Lower Alsace, on the Andlan, an affluent of the Ill, 9 miles NNW. of Schlettstadt. Pop. in 1900, 1731.

Andö, ând'ö (i.e., "Duck Island"), one of the Lofoten Islands, off the W. coast of Norway, 20 miles long and 10 miles broad.

Andoain, ân-do-ine', a town of Spain, in Biscay, on a railway, 6 miles from San Sebastián. Pop. (commune) 3000.

Andolsheim, ân'dôls-hîme', a village of Upper Alsace, 3½ miles SE. of Colmar.

Andora, ân-do'râ, a commune of Italy, on the W. coast of the Gulf of Genoa, 3 miles by rail SSW. of Alasio. Pop. about 2000.

Andorno Cacciorna, ân-dor'no kât-chor'nâ, a commune of Italy, 13 miles NE. of Ivrea, on the Cervo. Pop. about 3000.

Andorra, ân-dor'nâ (Fr. Andorre, ôw'dorrâ'), a neutral country with the name of a republic, situated on the S. slope of the Pyrenees, between the French department of Ariège and the Spanish province of Lérida, extending from lat. 42° 22' to 42° 35' N. and from lon. 1° 25' to 1° 45' E., surrounded by high mountains, on which the snow lies for six months in the year. Area, 175 sq. m. Its climate is cold, but healthy; the soil is unproductive in grain, but there are rich mines of iron and valuable forests. Oats and barley are the only crops. The government, a democracy, is vested in a council of 24 members, elected by the whole population. The executive head is a syndic, elected by the council for life. Andorra is nominally subject to the suzerainty of France and of the bishop of Urgel. The inhabitants, mostly shepherds, speak the Catalan language. Pop. about 6000. The independence of this little state is reputed to date from the time of Charlemagne, about 790. Capital, Andorra.—Adj. and inhab. ANDORREAN, ân-dor-rees'.

Andorra, an ancient village, capital of the republic of Andorra, at the foot of the Monte Andar, at an elevation of 3510 feet, and 12 miles N. of Urgel. Pop. about 1000.

Andouillé, ând'doo'e'yâ', a town of France, in Mayenne, 6 miles SE. of Chailand. Pop. about 800 (commune, 2500).

Andover, a borough and market-town of Hampshire, England, 12 miles NW. of Winchester. Pop. in 1901, 6509.

Andover, a post-town of Tolland co., Conn., on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 23 miles E. of Hartford. Pop. about 450.

Andover, a post-town of Henry co., Ill., about 25 miles N. by E. of Galesburg. Pop. in 1900, 238.

Andover, a post-hamlet of Clinton co., Iowa, on a division of the Chicago and Northwestern R., 12 miles N. by W. of Clinton. Pop. 80.

Andover, a post-village of Butler co., Kan., 11 miles E. of Wichita. Pop. about 125.

Andover, a post-township (town) of Oxford co., Me., about 45 miles NW. of Lewiston. Pop. in 1900, 727.

Andover, a banking post-village of Essex co., Mass., in Andover township (town), on the Boston and Maine R., 23 miles N. of Boston and 10 miles E. of Lowell. It is the seat of the Abbott Female Academy, Punchard High School, Phillips Academy (founded in 1778), and the Andover Theological Seminary, which was founded in 1807 and is the leading educational institution of the American Congregationalists. This seminary has a large endowment and a library of over 50,000 volumes. Harriet Beecher Stowe, who resided here after the publication of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is buried in the private cemetery of the trustees of Phillips Academy. Andover township (town) is bounded on the NW. by the Merrimac River. It has woollen-factories, flax-mills, and manufactures of linen and rubber. Pop. of the town in 1890, 6142; in 1900, 6813.

Andover, a post-township (town) of Merrimac co., N.H., about 24 miles NW. of Concord. Pop. in 1900, 1179.

Andover Station is on the Boston and Maine R., 29 miles from Concord.

Andover, a post-village of Sussex co., N.J., in Andover township, on the Lackawanna and the Lehigh and Hudson River Rs., 5 miles S. of Newton, its banking point. There are limestone-quarries and iron-mines in the township. Pop. of the township in 1900, 987.

Andover, a banking post-village of Allegany co., N.Y., in Andover township (town), on the Erie R., 76 miles W. of Elmira and 12 miles ESE. of Belmont. Pop. in 1900, 954; of the town, 1869.

Andover, a banking post-village of Ashtabula co., Ohio, on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern R., 38 miles N. of Youngstown. It has manufactures of flour, lumber, iron fence, etc. Pop. in 1900, 815.

Andover, a banking post-village of Day co., S.Dak., in a fine agricultural section, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 29 miles E. of Aberdeen. Pop. in 1900, 225.

Andover, a post-township (town) of Windsor co., Vt., about 28 miles S. by E. of Rutland. Pop. in 1900, 372.

Andover, or Tobique, a post-village of Victoria co., New Brunswick, on the river St. John, opposite the mouth of the Tobique River, 50 miles N. of Woodstock. Steamers ply between Andover and Woodstock. Pop. 350.

Andraitx, ân-drâ'itx, a town on the SW. coast of Majorca, 8 miles WSW. of Palma. Pop. of the commune, about 6500.

Andrarum, ân-drâ-rööm, a town of Sweden, 26 miles S. by W. of Christianstad. Pop. about 1500.

Andrava (ân-drâ'vâ) Bay, Madagascar, E. coast, about 60 miles SE. of Cape Amber. Lat. (Berry Head) 12° 56' S.; lon. 40° 56' E.

Andreafski, ân-drâ-âf'skee, a settlement of Alaska, on the right bank of the lower Yukon River, about lat. 62° 5' N., lon. 163° 12' W.

Annam', or Anam, sometimes called Co'chin-Chi'na, a kingdom of southeastern Asia, since 1884 a French protectorate, and virtually a division of French Indo-China, is situated on the China Sea, and extends from Tongking on the N. to French Cochinchina on the S., and from Siam and Cambodia on the W. to the sea on the E. It has a narrow strip of coast-land, 20-40 miles wide, which is bounded on the W. by a range of barren mountains. The country for 10 miles inland is generally sterile, but contains many fertile spots. The coast is indented with numerous bays, backed by mountains which rise to a height of several thousand feet and are broken into innumerable valleys and ravines. There are a number of rivers, but none of much importance. The chief productions, besides the cereals and fruits common to south Asia, are cinnamon-bark, cotton, sugar, silk, tea, coffee, the areca-nut, the betel-nut, and tobacco. The eagle-wood attains great perfection. The area of the protectorate is about 52,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 6,124,000, of whom 4000 were Chinese and 250

Europeans. The inhabitants are Annamese in the towns and along the coast, but in the hill-tracts back from the sea are various tribes of Mois of indigenous descent unmixed with Chinese blood. In religion the natives are chiefly Buddhists, but there are said to be several hundred thousand Roman Catholics. The mass of the people are subject to the most abject superstition. Veneration for the departed dead is general; and the temples containing their tablets are the most sacred spots of worship. The language of the country consists chiefly of monosyllabic words, by no means mellifluous, which are pronounced in high tones and with great rapidity by the natives. It is permeated with Chinese elements. In writing, the Annamese use a modification of the Chinese characters.

By a treaty made in 1884 and ratified in 1886 French protection was established over the kingdom of Annam. The ports of Turane, Qui-nhon, and Xuan-dai have been opened to European commerce, the first named having been conceded to France. French troops occupy part of the citadel of Hué, the capital. Annamese functionaries administer all the internal affairs of the kingdom.

The territory comprised in the old kingdom of Annam embraced the present kingdom of that name, Tongking, French Cochinchina, and part of Cambodia. The French established their dominion in lower Cochinchina in 1859-67 and in Tongking in 1882-85.

Anse d'Ariet, áns-dar'lá', or Les Anses d'Ariet, láns-dar'lá', a town on the SW. coast of Martinique, 8 miles from Fort-de-France. Pop. of the commune, 3000.

Anse d'Hainault, áns dá'nó', a small cargo port of the island of Haiti, at the extremity of the SW. peninsula.

Anseghem, áns-gém', a town of Belgium, in West Flanders, 12 miles E. of Courtrai. Pop. (commune) 3500.

Ansel, a post-hamlet of Pulaski co., Ky.

Ansel'ma, a post-village of Chester co., Pa., 8 miles S. of Phoenixville. Pop. about 300.

Ansel'mo, a post-village of Custer co., Neb., 20 miles by rail NW. of Broken Bow. Pop. in 1900, 145.

Anserma Nueva, án-sér'má noo-á'vá, a village of Colombia, 7 miles NNW. of Cartago.

Ans'ley, a post-village of Pike co., Ala. Pop. about 150.

Ansley, a post-village of Worth co., Ga. Pop. about 100.

Ansley, a banking post-village of Custer co., Neb., on the Burlington and Missouri River R., 15 miles SE. of Broken Bow. Pop. in 1900, 468.

Ans'ley Bay. See ANNESLEY BAY.

Ansó, án'só', a town of Spain, province of Huesca, 21 miles NW. of Jaca. Pop. 1200. It exports excellent wool.

Ansoes, or Ansus, a trading-post of Dutch New Guinea, on the island of Jobi, in Geelvink Bay.

An'son, a county in the S. part of North Carolina, has an area of 551 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by Rocky River, and on the E. by the Yadkin or Pedee. Gold is found in the county. Capital, Wadesboro. Pop. in 1890, 20,027; in 1900, 21,870.

Anson, a post-township (town) of Somerset co., Me., 20 miles by rail N. of Oakland, bounded on the E. by the Kennebec River. Pop. in 1900, 1830.

Anson, a post-hamlet of Clark co., Mo.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  miles from Croton, Iowa.

Anson, a banking post-village, capital of Jones co., Tex., 150 miles W. of Fort Worth and about 20 miles N. of Abilene station of the Texas and Pacific R. Pop. in 1900, 495.

Anson Bay, on the NW. coast of Australia. It receives the river Daly.

Anso'mia, a city of New Haven co., Conn., on the E. bank of the Naugatuck River, nearly 2 miles from its mouth, and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 12 miles NW. of New Haven. It has manufactures of clocks, brass and copper goods, woollen goods, paper machinery, etc. Pop. in 1890, 10,342; in 1900, 12,681.

Ansonia, or Dal'tas, a banking post-village of Darke co., Ohio, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and the Cincinnati and Northern Rs., 49 miles W. by S. of Bellefontaine. Pop. in 1900, 676.

Ansonia, a post-village of Tioga co., Pa., on Pine Creek, about 8 miles W. of Wellbore.

Anson's Island, or Lord Anson's Island, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, called by the natives Buka. Lat.  $5^{\circ} 0' S$ ; lon.  $154^{\circ} 34' E$ .

An'sonville, a post-village of Anson co., N.C., 10 miles from Wadesboro.

Ansonville, a post-village of Clearfield co., Pa., about 28 miles N. by W. of Altoona.

Anspach. See ANSBACH.

An'sted, a town of Fayette co., W.Va., 8 miles N. of Fayetteville and  $\frac{1}{4}$  miles from Hawk's Nest Station. It has coal-mines. Pop. in 1900, 1090.

An'struther, sometimes pronounced án'ster, a seaport and royal burgh of Scotland, co. of Fife, composed of Easter and Wester Anstruther, and forming, with Killyrenny, a continuous narrow town along the Firth of Forth, 13 $\frac{1}{2}$  miles SE. of Cupar. Pop. in 1901, 1663. Anstruther Easter was the birthplace of Dr. Chalmers. With other St. Andrews burghs Anstruther returns 1 member to parliament.

Anta, án'tá, a town of Peru, 25 miles NW. of Cuzco. Lat.  $13^{\circ} 25' S$ ; lon.  $72^{\circ} 15' W$ .

Antakiyeh, the Turkish name of ANTIOCH.

Antalfalva, án'tál-fál'vóh, a village of Hungary, co. of Torontál, 18 miles from Pancsova.

Antalo, án-tá'lo, a town of Abyssinia, in Tigré, 150 miles ENE. of Gondar.

Antananarivo, Madagascar. See TANANARIVO.

Antarctica, or the Antarctic Regions, that portion of the earth's surface, land and water, that lies within the Antarctic Circle, with which in a general way are frequently included parts of the contiguous region which present Antarctic or Polar conditions. Less is known of this region than of any other large portion of the globe. Its land-masses are comprised almost entirely in Graham Land and the adjacent islands of the Dirk-Gerrits Archipelago, lying south of the extremity of South America, in Victoria and Wilkes Lands, south of Australia, and in Kaiser-Wilhelm II., Kemp, and Enderby Islands, situated between the 90th and 50th meridians of east longitude. By some geographers much the greater part of the region included between these lands or islands is assumed to be a vast united continent,—the Antarctic Continent,—with an area perhaps covering not less than 3,000,000–4,000,000 sq. m., but there is as yet very little positively known to support this conclusion—a conclusion based mainly upon the study of a few rock specimens (granite, gneiss, mica-schist, sandstone, and limestone) obtained at or off some points (Adélie Land, Enderby Island, Seymour Island, Mount Gauss, Victoria Land) of the ice-veiled region, and the supposition that the sea shallowed so rapidly towards the coast as to give indications of a true subcontinental plateau. This latter inference is not supported by the recent explorations of the "Valdivia," which obtained soundings of 2500 and 3000 fathoms close off Enderby Island. It is more probable, as has been contended by Supan, that Victoria and Wilkes Lands (with the parts specifically known as Adélie, Clarie, Sabrina, Budd, and Knox Lands), with their extension westward to Enderby Island, alone constitute a continental area, and that the western section of the circle is composed mainly of water.

Much the greater part of Antarctica that has thus far been observed by investigators is deeply buried under a mantle of snow and ice, which descends quite to the sea, and there in many places unites with the surface ice of the ocean. It is, indeed, still an open question whether some of the parts designated as land are not in reality only sea-floes or icebergs so arranged as to give the appearance of a terrestrial surface. The largest united piece of unquestionable land is Victoria Land, lying almost due south of New Zealand, and which was first visited by Sir James Clark Ross in 1841–42, and by him explored to beyond the 78th parallel of south latitude. In this land, which contains the lofty Admiralty, Victoria, Prince Albert, and Parry Mountains, with extreme elevations (Mount Longstaff, in lat.  $83^{\circ} S$ .) possibly exceeding 15,000 feet, is located the South Magnetic Pole, the position of which, as determined by Armitage in 1903, is approximately lat.  $73^{\circ} 20' S$ , lon.  $155^{\circ} E$ . Victoria Land discharges immense glaciers, but much of the shore-line, including the Duke of York, Doubtful, Possession, and Coulman Islands, Cape Adare, Cape Crozier, and Newnes Land, are remarkably free of ice and support a vegetation of lichens and a few mosses. On an island in the extreme south of Ross Sea are Erebus and Terror, the former an active volcano, 12,365 feet in elevation (Terror, 10,844 feet). It was in eruption at the time of Ross's visit, and smoking when observed by Borchgrevink in Feb., 1900, and by Scott in 1902 and 1903. The main-land W. of this point rises rapidly to the interior, and is heavily cloaked in ice and glacier. An elevation of 9000 feet was reached by Armitage in Jan., 1903. Southward, the mountain-masses of Victoria Land appear to have a direct meridional extension for several hundred miles, as no termination was visible from the farthest point reached by Scott in Dec., 1902, in lat.  $82^{\circ} 17' S$ , lon.  $163^{\circ} E$ ,—the extreme southing thus far made. See VICTORIA LAND.

Eastward of the position of these mountains, and trending in an E. and W. line somewhat above the 78th parallel of latitude, is the long wall-like mass of ice, 30–280 feet in general height (rising in the E. to 800–900 feet), and perhaze covering an extent the better part of 500 miles, which was designated by Ross the "Great Ice Barrier." It has often been regarded as the sea-wall or terminal part of a huge continental glacier descending northward from the inland ice (or Parry Mountains), and by Borchgrevink and Bernacchi it was thought to be the basal portion (mer-de-glacé) of a giant glacier travelling eastward, with a width perhaps not exceeding 50 miles. This view is not sustained by the more recent explorations of the "Discovery" party, who, however, have not determined its nature. It was ascended in Feb., 1900, in lat.  $78^{\circ} 34' S.$ , lon.  $164^{\circ} 32' W.$ , and found to have a solid surface, offering no obstruction to sledging. More recently (Feb., 1902) it was ascended to lat.  $78^{\circ} 50' S.$  The east wall of this barrier, close outside of which soundings of 100 fathoms have been made, abuts upon King Edward VII. Land, which rises to 2000-3000 feet or more.

Climate.—The climate of Antarctica is rigidly severe, characterized by cold summers and autumns and a rigorous winter. The average temperature for the year on lat.  $70^{\circ} S.$  is about  $13^{\circ}$ . The lowest record of the "Belgica" expedition, taken on lat.  $70^{\circ} 30' S.$ , was  $-46^{\circ}$ , or some  $3^{\circ}$  less than the extreme cold recorded by Borchgrevink at Cape Adare (Victoria Land). The maximum temperature noted by the two expeditions at about the positions named was  $37.5^{\circ}$  and  $48^{\circ}$  respectively. The land-parties of the "Discovery" exploration found temperatures of  $-48^{\circ}$  to  $-69^{\circ}$ , and at Cape Armitage a reading of  $-67^{\circ}$  was established, and it would now seem that the full or average Antarctic winter is as severe as that of the north.

Vegetable and Animal Life.—Beyond the lowest of vegetable forms, the lichens and some mosses, there is practically no vegetation on the lands of Antarctica, a condition widely contrasting with what exists in the Polar regions of the north. The low summer temperature and marked deficiency of sunlight, due to frequent fogs and low-lying vapors, are mainly responsible for this condition. In this connection it is interesting to note that Larsen obtained on Seymour Island, off Graham Land (south of Patagonia), pieces of fossil wood which have been identified as being conifers (probably araucarians) closely similar to forms of the modern South American sylva. This discovery has proved a strong argument in favor of the view which holds to a former connection between parts of the Antarctic tract and the South American continent. Later explorations (O. Nordenskjöld) have also brought to light a Cretaceous and Tertiary molluscan fauna in this portion of the Antarctic tract, and of a still later bone-bed, largely composed of bird-fragments. Fossils have also been obtained in Victoria Land.

The animal life of Antarctica is virtually that of the sea, and until the voyage of the "Belgica" no animals except birds were encountered on any part of the lands. A few insects are now known from Hughes Bay. Of the birds the most distinctive are the penguins, which abound in some places in countless numbers. The penguin rookeries of Cape Adare are among the most wonderful exhibitions of animal life on the globe. Other birds are gulls, terns, skuas, and albatrosses. The southern skua (Stercorarius Antarcticus) does not appear to differ specifically from a form of the Arctic regions. Of the mammalia of the Antarctic seas may be mentioned various forms of whale, several of which, including the right whale (Balena mysticetus), are identical with species of northern waters, numerous seals, and the sea-lion. The elephant seal (Macrorhinus leoninus) is by many zoologists considered to be identical with the species inhabiting the California coast.

No vestiges of human habitation have been found in any portion of the Antarctic tract.

The record of Antarctic explorations is comprised mainly in the voyages of discovery of Cook (1772, who penetrated to lat.  $71^{\circ} 10' S.$ ), Weddell (1823, to lat.  $74^{\circ} 15'$ , southward of South Georgia, in what has since been called the Weddell Sea), Ross (1839-43,  $78^{\circ} 10'$ , in Victoria Land), Dumont d'Urville (1839-40), Wilkes (1839-40), Larsen (1893-94), Borchgrevink (1899-1900), Gerlache (1897-98,—the "Belgica" expedition, the first to winter in the true Antarctic tract, in  $71^{\circ} 36'$ ), O. Nordenskjöld (the "Antarctic," 1901-02, who demonstrated the continuity of Louis Philippe Land with King Oscar II. Land through Graham Land), Drygalski (the "Gauss"), Scott (the "Discovery," 1901-03, whose furthest southing has already been referred to), and Bruce (the "Scotia," 1903, who attained the lat. of  $70^{\circ} 21' S.$  in the Weddell Sea, and found there a depth of water of 2443 fathoms,—establishing in this quarter an abyssal Antarctic depth similar to that which Nansen had determined for the central Arctic Ocean). For the characteristics of the waters of Antarctica, see ANTARCTIC OCEAN.

Antarctic Ocean, the name given to the expanse of water around the South Pole within the limit of the Antarctic Circle, but frequently used in a more extensive sense to designate the cold oceanic regions in high southern latitudes, without any very positive regard to the limits of the Antarctic Circle. The Antarctic Ocean is essentially an ice-studded sea, its icebergs being seemingly more numerous and travelling further towards the equator than those of the Arctic waters. The large flat-topped berge, which are frequently described as being characteristic of the south, find, however, their counterpart in the giant table bergs of Melville Bay. Our knowledge of the depth of the sea is still largely deficient. Soundings of from 1500 to 3000 fathoms, ranging even to 4000 fathoms (Ross, in 1843, in lat.  $68^{\circ} 34' S.$ , lon.  $12^{\circ} 49' W.$ ), have been obtained in many parts, and the evidence seems to sustain the assumption of a general shoaling towards the south, particularly along the tract which has been designated the Antarctic Continent, where the bottom has been reached at 100-500 fathoms off Victoria Land, at 500-800 fathoms off Adélie Land, at 160-500 fathoms E. of Joinville Island, and at 200 fathoms in the pack off Palmer Island (exploration of the "Belgica"). On the other hand, the recent survey of the "Valdivia" has unexpectedly revealed the great depth of 2500 and 3000 fathoms close off Enderby Island; and equally great depths have been revealed by the explorations of 1902-03. The surface temperature of the Antarctic waters south of about the 63d parallel of south latitude is confined between about  $27^{\circ}$  and  $33^{\circ}$  or  $35^{\circ}$ ; the great mass of the deeper water has a temperature of  $32^{\circ}$ - $35^{\circ}$ , corresponding closely with the general deep-sea (bottom) temperatures elsewhere (temperate and tropical regions). The life of the Antarctic waters is very prolific, extending from the surface (algæ, diatoms, pelagic mollusks, crustaceans, etc.) to the bottom; indeed, it would seem, from the researches of the "Challenger" and the "Valdivia," that the deep-sea fauna is richer in specific types than the corresponding fauna of other oceanic regions. For further characteristics of the ocean and the region occupied by it, see ANTARCTICA and ATLANTIC OCEAN.

Antas, án'tás, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 40 miles NE. of Almería. Pop. (commune) about 3000.

Ante, a post-hamlet of Brunswick co., Va. Pop. about 50.

Antelope, a county in the NE. part of Nebraska, has an area of 874 sq. m. It is intersected by the Elkhorn River. The surface is undulating; the soil is fertile. Capital, Neligh. Pop. in 1890, 10,399; in 1900, 11,344.

Antelope, a post-hamlet of Marion co., Kan., 12 miles N. of Florence.

Antelope, a post-village of Wasco co., Oregon, 90 miles E. of Salem. Pop. 249.

Antelope, a post-village of Jack co., Tex., about 75 miles WNW. of Fort Worth.

Antelope (or Church) Island, the largest island in the Great Salt Lake, Utah, is 15 miles long, and affords sheep pasturage.

Antelope Creek, of Tehama co., Cal., runs south-westward, and enters the Sacramento at or near Red Bluff.

Antelope Springs, a post-station and watering-place of Mineral co., Colo., on the Denver and Rio Grande R., 105 miles W. by N. of Fort Garland. It has a hot sulphur spring.

Antequera, án-tá-ká-rá (anc. Antiquaria), a city of Spain, in Andalusia, 28 miles NNW. of Málaga. Pop. in 1900, 31,609. In the old town are remains of a Moorish castle, built on Roman foundations. The city is well supplied with good water. It has manufactures of woollens and silks and many tanneries. A large portion of the inhabitants are engaged in cultivating the fertile Vega in which the town is situated. There are remarkable rock formations in the vicinity.

Anterrieux, án'tér-re-uh' (anc. Anderitum), a village of France, department of Cantal.

Antes, án'tes, a township of Blair co., Pa. See ANTRIS.

Antes Fort, a post-village of Lycoming co., Pa., on the Pennsylvania R., 12 miles W. of Williamsport. Pop. 600.

An'thom, a banking post-town of Woodbury co., Iowa, on the Illinois Central R., 35 miles SE. of Sioux City. Pop. in 1900, 437.

Anthony's (án'to-nis) Mill, a post-hamlet of Crawford co., Mo., 88 miles SW. of St. Louis.

Anthony, a post-village of Marion co., Fla., 9 miles by rail N. of Ocala. Pop. in 1900, 198.

Anthony, a banking city, capital of Harper co., Kan., on the Missouri Pacific and other railroads, 56 miles SW. of Wichita. It has manufactures of lumber and flour. Pop. in 1900, 1179.

Anthony, a post-village of Hunterdon co., N.J., about 40 miles N. of Trenton.

Anthony, a post-village of Dona Anna co., N.Mex., on the Mexican Central R., 75 miles (direct) E. by S. of Deming. Pop. about 200.

Anthony, a post-village of Kent co., R.I., on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 14 miles SSW. of Providence. It has cotton-mills. Pop. about 1000. The banking point is Centerville.

Anthony, a post-village of Fannin co., Tex.

Anthony House, a post-hamlet of Nevada co., Cal.

Anthony's Nose, in Montgomery co., N.Y., the extremity of a hill or mountain called the Klips (i.e., "rock" or "cliff"), on the N. bank of the Mohawk, resembling a nose.

Anthony's Nose, in Putnam co., N.Y., a bold promontory on the E. side of the Hudson, at the S. entrance to the Highlands, 47 miles from New York. Elevation, 900 feet.

Anthracite, a post-village of Alberta, Canada, on the Canadian Pacific R., 60 miles from Calgary, its banking point.

Antibes, ân-tee'b (anc. Antipolis), a strongly fortified seaport town of France, department of Alpes-Maritimes, 15 miles SW. of Nice. Pop. in 1901, 8935. Its port is defended at its entrance by Fort Carré, on a rocky islet. On every side the town is environed by olive, orange, fig, and vine plantations, and by flower-gardens, whose products are used in the manufacture of perfumery. Antibes was founded by a Greek colony from Marseilles about 550 a.c. There are interesting Roman remains.

Anticosti, an-te-kos'te, a large island of Canada, province of Quebec, in the estuary of the St. Lawrence, between lat. 49° and 50° N. and lon. 62° and 65° W. Area, 3145 sq. m. The north coast is high and without harbors, the south shore low and very dangerous. There are several light-houses on the island, the one on the SW. point, 100 feet high, being in lat. 49° 23' 53" N. and lon. 63° 38' 47" W. Anticosti Island is a valuable resort for seal- and bear-hunting, and for salmon-, trout-, cod- and herring-fishing. There is much excellent soil. On the lowlands on the S. coast there are extensive peat-bogs, of 2 to 3 feet thickness and of excellent quality. Marl, plumbago, and other valuable minerals are reported. The island was purchased by M. Menier, of France, in 1895, and its colonization begun in 1896.

Antietam, a post-village of Washington co., Md., 10 miles S. of Hagerstown.

Antietam (an-tee'tam) Creek rises in Franklin co., Pa., crosses the southern boundary of that state, runs southward through Washington co., Md., and enters the Potomac River about 7 miles N. of Harper's Ferry. A great battle was fought on the banks of this creek, near Sharpsburg, between the Union forces commanded by General McClellan and the Confederates commanded by General Lee, on Sept. 16-17, 1862. The Union army remained masters of the field.

Antignana, ân-teen-yâ'nâ, a town of Austria, in Istria, 32 miles NW. of Fiume. Pop. in 1900, 3705.

Antigo, a banking city, the capital of Langlade co., Wis., on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 96 miles NNW. of Oshkosh. It has railroad-shops, breweries, foundries, manufactures of wood and iron, etc. Pop. in 1900, 5145.

Antigonish, ân'tig-o-neesh', a county in the NE. of Nova Scotia, bounded N. by St. George's Bay. It has good grazing land and supports large herds of cattle. Coal, gypsum, gold, copper, and marble are found in the county. Capital, Antigonish.

Antigonish, formerly Syd'ney, or Sid'ney, a banking town and port of entry of Nova Scotia, in the co. of Antigonish, on the Intercolonial R., 40 miles E. of New Glasgow. It is the county town, and the seat of the Catholic bishop of Arichat. It has a large college (St. Francis Xavier), a cathedral (St. Ninian), a Catholic seminary, etc., and is the distributing centre of a large area of agricultural produce. The inhabitants are chiefly of Scotch descent. St. George's Bay, a fine inlet of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, is situated 8 miles from the town. Its harbor is navigable for vessels of small tonnage. Pop. in 1901, 1526.

Antigonish Harbor, a settlement at the head of St. George's Bay, Antigonish co., Nova Scotia, 43 miles from New Glasgow, commands a fine view of the bay, Cape Breton, and surrounding country.

Antigua, ân-tee'gwâ, one of the British West Indies, belonging to the Leeward group. It is in lat. 17° 2'-17° 13' N.; lon. 61° 44'-61° 58' W. Area, 108 sq. m. It is 20 miles long and somewhat circular in outline, has a broken and elevated surface, and its soil is fertile, resting upon calcareous and trap rocks. The climate is dry and pleasant; but in summer hurricanes sometimes occur. The presidency of Antigua (including Barbuda and Redonda) is the most important member of the colony of the Leeward Islands, and has a governor and legislature and an Anglican and a Moravian bishop. Chief exports are sugar, molasses, rum, and pineapples. The towns are St. John (the capital), Falmouth, Parham, and English Harbor. Pop. in 1901, 34,971, of which 28,000 were negroes. Antigua was discovered in 1493 by Columbus, and settled by the British in 1632.

Antigua, a town of the Island of Fuerteventura, in the Canaries. Pop. (commune) about 2500.

Antigüedad, ân-tee-gwâ-dâd', a town of Spain, 15 miles NE. of Palencia. Pop. (commune) 1200.

Am'ti-Lib'anus, or Anti-Lebanon, a mountain-range of Syria, running parallel to and E. of the Lebanon chain, the two enclosing the valley of Coele-Syria. It rises in the snow-capped Mount Hermon, SW. of Damascus, on the border of Palestine, to a height of 9050 feet.

Antilles, ân-till'lez or ân'teel' (Lat. Antillæ; Fr. Îles Antilles, eel-zôm'teel'; Sp. Antillas, ân-teel'yâs), a term applied to the bulk of the West India Islands, comprising two groups, called the Greater Antilles and Lesser Antilles, which latter are also named Caribbean Islands. The Greater Antilles comprise Cuba, Jamaica, Haiti, Porto Rico, and several small islands near their coasts. The Lesser Antilles are numerous small islands, mostly arranged in a long row, which is curved like a crescent, between the Caribbean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean. The principal islands of this group are Trinidad, Tobago, Barbados, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Martinique, Dominica, Guadeloupe, Antigua, and Barbuda. The island of St. Thomas is at about the dividing line between the two groups. The greater number of these are British, and 2, Guadeloupe and Martinique, belong to France; others belong to the Netherlands, Denmark, etc. The name Antilles is sometimes applied to the whole of the West Indies. See names of the principal islands, also WEST INDIES, LEWARD ISLANDS, WINDWARD ISLANDS, VIRGIN ISLANDS, etc.

Anti-Milo, ân-te-mee'lo, or Anti-Melos, an-tee-mee'los, an island of the Greek Archipelago, 5 miles NW. of Milo.

Antioch, ân-te-ok (L. Antiochia; Gr. Ἀντιόχεια; Turk. Antakieh, ân-tâ'ke'e'), a city and the ancient capital of Syria, in its N. part, 57 miles W. of Aleppo, on the left bank of the Orontes, about 20 miles above its mouth. Lat. 36° 11' N.; lon. 36° 9' E. Pop. about 28,000, of which 4000 are Christians. Its ancient walls, varying from 20 to 70 feet in height, enclose an area of uneven ground several miles in circumference. The houses are mostly mean and of slight materials; they differ from those of Eastern towns in general in having sloping roofs. Antioch has many mosques, one or two churches, and several Christian schools. Baths and bazaars are numerous. The city walls, a ruined aqueduct, 2 bridges, and a portion of pavement are almost all the remaining vestiges of ancient magnificence. Antioch was founded about 300 a.c. by Seleucus Nicator, and named in honor of his father Antiochus. Under the Seleucid kings of Syria it rose to great splendor and became a focus of Greek culture. It maintained its importance under the Romans and Byzantines, its situation rendering it a great emporium of commerce between the East and West. It suffered severely by successive earthquakes in the early centuries of the Christian era, and in 540 it was destroyed by the Persians. It was soon rebuilt, but it was taken by the Saracens in 638. Antioch was one of the chief centres of early Christianity, and its bishops were recognized as patriarchs of the Church. Its ancient population has been estimated at 400,000. Chrysostom (about A.D. 400) computes the population at 200,000, more than one-half of them Christians. It was the capital of a Christian principality from 1099 to 1268, since which time it has declined. It was visited by a terrible earthquake in 1872. Some ruins, about 5 miles southwestward, on the S. bank of the Orontes, mark the site of the grove of Daphne and temple of Apollo. A Greek, a Jacobite, and 4 Catholic prelates, of different rites, bear the title of patriarch of Antioch; but all are non-resident.

Antioch, ân-te-ök, a banking post-town of Contra Costa co., Cal., at the E. end of Suisun Bay, near the mouths of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, and on the Southern Pacific R., about 58 miles by water ENE. of San Francisco. It has paper-mills, etc. Pop. in 1900, 674.

Antioch, a post-village of Troup co., Ga., about 75 miles SW. of Atlanta and about 15 miles NW. of La Grange.

Antioch, a banking post-village of Lake co., Ill., on the Wisconsin Central R., 52 miles NNW. of Chicago. Pop. in 1900, 522.

Antioch, a hamlet of Jay co., Ind., 5 miles SE. of Portland.

Antioch, a hamlet of Washington co., Ky., 25 miles E. of Bardstown.

Antioch, a post-hamlet of Claiborne parish, La., 9 miles NE. of Homer.

Antioch, a post-hamlet of Prentiss co., Miss., 10 miles W. of Riens and about 4 miles N. of Booneville.

Antioch, a post-hamlet of Robeson co., N.C., about 20 miles SW. of Fayetteville.

Antwerp, ant'wèrp (Flem. and Ger. Antwerpen, ant'wèrp'en; L. Antuerpia; Fr. Anvers, ân'vair'; Sp. Amberes, âm-bâ-rés), a city of Belgium and one of the strongest fortresses of Europe, capital of a province of its own name, on the right bank of the Scheldt, 28 miles N. of Brussels and 32 miles ENE. of Ghent. Lat. of the cathedral, 51° 13' 2" N.; lon. 4° 24' 2" E. The appearance of the city, which is the principal arsenal of Belgium, is exceedingly picturesque,—an effect produced by its numerous churches, convents, magnificent public buildings, its monuments of Rubens, Van Dyck, Teniers, and others, its elaborate and extensive fortifications, and the profusion of beautiful trees. All the main streets and the new avenues (De Keyser Lei, Promenoire, etc.) are lined with elegant buildings, and many stately antique-looking houses give a characteristic feature to Antwerp. The famous cathedral, begun in 1352 and not completed until 1592, is one of the most beautiful specimens of Gothic architecture in general. It has a length of 384 feet, and covers an area of 70,000 sq. ft., or somewhat more than the cathedral of Cologne; the north tower, the only one completed, is 402 feet in height. The cathedral contains Rubens's masterpiece, the "Descent from the Cross." Other churches of note are St. James's, St. Andrew's, and St. Paul's. Among the other edifices are the Exchange (built in 1583, burned in 1858, and rebuilt in the old style in 1869-72), the Hôtel de Ville, the Palais de Justice, and the royal palace. Its institutions comprise academies of painting, of the fine arts and of the sciences, a royal conservatory of music, the Musée-Plantin, the Royal Museum (containing the finest works of the first masters of the Flemish school), and botanical and zoological gardens. Of the vast docks, dock-yards, and basins constructed by Bonaparte, the last only remain. The former are now converted into commercial docks, lined with capacious warehouses. The new wharves, constructed in 1877 and enlarged in 1899-1901, have a length of over 3 miles, and permit steamships drawing over 20 feet to lie alongside. The great northern docks cover an area of over 250 acres. The harbor is one of the finest in the world. In 1899 it was entered by 5420 vessels, of which 4937 were steamers. The value of the imports in the year 1899 was 1,750,000,000 francs, and that of the exports about 850,000,000 francs. Numerous regular steamer lines start from Antwerp to all parts of the world. Antwerp is joined by great canals with Holland and the river Maas. The city is one of the great emigration ports of Europe. In 1874 the differences existing between Antwerp and the government of Belgium were adjusted, and the famous citadel of Antwerp, which had existed 300 years, was blown up in the presence of King Leopold II. The principal manufactures of the city are black silks and velvets, laces, soap, leather, cigars, spirits, camlets, serges, and flannels. Cotton, linen, carpets, hats, and outlery are also manufactured to a considerable extent. There are sugar-refineries and extensive ship-building. Diamond-cutting is an important industry. For hides, petroleum, wool, grain, coffee, cotton, coal, oils, timber, iron, and guano, Antwerp is one of the largest importing places on the continent. In the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries it was the great centre of European commerce, an average of 500 vessels daily entering its port. Its siege and capture by the Spaniards in 1584-85 were a great blow to its prosperity. Pop. in 1875, 148,814; in 1882, 175,636; in 1891, 227,225; in 1900, 285,600.

Apennines, ǎp'en-nín' (It. Appennino, ǎp-pá-nee'no; anc. Apenninus Mons), a mountain-chain which detaches itself from the Maritime, or Ligurian, Alps at the pass of Cadibona, or the Collo dell'Altare, about lon. 8° 30' E., having at first a general direction from W. to E., nearly parallel with the Pennine and Lepontine Alps, from which it is separated by the valley of the Po. In about lon. 11° E. the chain turns towards the S. and traverses the Italian peninsula throughout its entire length, passing out from the extremity of Calabria (the "toe" of the peninsula) to reappear in Sicily and again in the Atlas Mountains of Tunis and the NW. of Africa. While in these separated parts the mountains differ somewhat from the type-chain of Italy, there is no question that they belong technically to the same system, which is linked in the NW. with the Alps and again in the SW. (crossing the Strait of Gibraltar) with the Sierra Ronda of Spain. The Apennines, which are perhaps the youngest of the European mountains, dating their final uplift from the late Tertiary or Post-Tertiary periods, are of the folded type of construction, and are fractured off into the depression which is a part of the Tyrrhenian basin.

They are flanked on either side by an extended foreland, which is in part a moderately elevated plateau, such as is constituted by the highlands of Tuscany, an upheaved seabed (the plains of Rome and Calabria), or an unstable lowland, dominated by volcanic cones of greater or less activity (Phlegrean Fields, Vesuvius, etc.). The mountains are constructed principally of schist and slate, with associations of massive limestone. The length of the chain is approximately 800 miles. Nowhere do the summits attain the magnificent proportions of the peaks of the Alps, and nowhere do they rise strictly to the level of perpetual snow. Mount Etna, which may justly be regarded as forming part of the Apennine system, is 10,742 feet in elevation, and usually carries some snow on its summit; the Gran Sasso d'Italia, with its loftiest peak, Monte Corno, in the central division of the chain (in the Abruzzi), is the culminating point of the system in Italy proper, 9583 ft. The Apennines may be conveniently divided into the three divisions of the northern (Ligurian and Etruscan) Apennines (Monte Cimone, 7110 ft.), the central (Umbrian, Roman, and Abruzzian) Apennines (Monte Corno; Monte Amaro, 9170 ft.), and the southern (Neapolitan and Calabrian) Apennines (Monte Pollino, 7375 ft.; Aspromonte, 6420 ft.). In this latter division belong Vesuvius, the only active volcano of the continent, 4200 ft., and Vulture, near Meid, 4365 ft. The ancient Via Flaminia crossed the Roman Apennines near the site of Foligno, while the Via Appia traversed the Neapolitan Apennines on the line connecting Naples with Benevento. The chief mineral wealth of the Apennines is found in the celebrated marbles of Carrara, Seravezza, and Siena. Below 3200 feet in elevation the flanks of the principal chain are covered with a varied vegetation, of which the orange, citron, olive, and palm form the lower zone; but forests are rare in the Apennines. Above 3200 feet the mountains are generally devoid of vegetation.

Apenrade, ǎp'en-rá'deh, a seaport of Prussia, in Schleswig, on a fjord of the same name in the Little Belt, 35 miles N. of the town of Schleswig. Pop. in 1900, 5952. It has an interesting town-hall and a school of navigation.

Appalachian Mountains, a system of mountains in the eastern part of the United States. The term comprises all the mountain-ridges between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mississippi River. The system extends from the province of Quebec to the northern part of Alabama, nearly 1300 miles, and consists of numerous parallel ridges, the direction of which is nearly NE. and SW. Among the local names given to these mountains are White Mountains in New Hampshire, Green Mountains in Vermont, Catskills, Highlands, Shawangunks, and Adirondacks in New York, Alleghenies (Blue and Kittatinny Mountains) in Pennsylvania, Blue Ridge in Virginia and North Carolina, Cumberland Mountains in Tennessee, and Black Mountains in North Carolina. The dissociated Ozark Mountains are frequently included with the system. In Pennsylvania, which is near the middle, the mountains, with intervening valleys, occupy a tract about 100 miles wide. Towards the extremities they diminish in width but increase in altitude. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, is 6293 feet in height; Mount Katahdin, in Maine, 5200 ft.; Mount Marcy, in New York, 5345 ft.; and Mount Mansfield, in Vermont, 4364 ft. above the level of the sea. The highest peaks of the whole system are in the Black Mountains of North Carolina, where numerous points attain an elevation exceeding 6000 ft. The loftiest of these, and the highest point of land of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, is Black Dome, or Mount Mitchell, 6710 ft. In Pennsylvania the mountains present no high peaks, but nearly straight, parallel ridges, remarkable for their regularity and evenness of outline.

The Appalachians are mostly composed of stratified rocks, sandstones, shales, and limestones of the Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous ages. Granitic or metamorphic rocks of ancient date (Archean or Azoic) form the nuclei of the White and Adirondack Mountains, and they are also the constructing mass of the Highlands of the Hudson and of much of the more southerly Blue Ridge. No rocks of later date than the Upper Carboniferous or Permian enter into the formation of this mountain-system. Among the remarkable features of the Appalachians are the gaps or chasms through which the Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, and Potomac Rivers find a passage. The Appalachians are mostly covered with forests of good timber, including the ash, beech, hickory, chestnut, white oak and other oaks, sugar-maple, white pine, and wild cherry. They contain inexhaustible deposits of magnetic iron-ore, hematite, anthracite and bituminous coal, with some other valuable minerals. The great Appalachian coal-field, with its associated oil deposits and wells of natural gas, occupies a large part of the region covered by the mountains. Aquileia, ā-kwē-lā'yā, the mediæval Ag'lar', a town of Austria-Hungary, at the head of the Adriatic, 22 miles NNW. of Trieste. Pop. 1000. It was one of the chief commercial emporiums of the Roman world and a great station for the Roman fleet. The Emperor Augustus often resided here, and the city was sometimes styled the "second Rome." It was taken and destroyed by Attila in A.D. 453. The Patriarchs of Aquileia figured among the great dignitaries of the mediæval Church. Many remains of antiquity are found in its vicinity, and the town possessed a valuable archaeological museum.

Aquilla, a post-village of Hill co., Tex., 166 miles by rail SE. of Albany.

Aquin, ā-kān', a town of Haiti, on the S. shore, 51 miles W. of Jacmel. Pop. of commune, 20,000.

Aquino, ā-kwē'no (anc. Aqui'nem), a town and bishop's see of Italy, province of Caserta, on the railway from Rome to Naples, 5 miles NE. of Pontecorvo. Pop. 1200. It was the birthplace of Juvenal. Thomas Aquinas was born in the vicinity.

Aquis Granum. See AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

Aquitaine, ā-kwē-tān' (Fr. pron. ā-kee'tēn'), a mediæval duchy. See AQUITANIA and GUIENNE.

Aquitania, in Cæsar's time the designation of the southwestern division of Gaul, extending from the Pyrenees to the Garonne. As one of the four divisions of Gaul under the Roman Empire, Aquitania embraced a much larger region, reaching far into the basin of the Loire. Aquitania was a kingdom under the early Carolingians. The duchy of Aquitaine was one of the great mediæval fiefs of France. It was united with England in 1154, and was finally conquered by the French in 1451. In the Middle Ages the name Guienne supplanted that of Aquitaine. The later province or government of Guienne, with narrower limits than the duchy of Aquitaine, was embraced in the region of the Garonne and the Dordogne.

Aquitanius Sinus. See BAY OF BISCAY.

Aquokee, a river of Georgia. See TOCOA.

Aquo'ne, a post-village of Macon co., N.C.

Arab, a post-hamlet of Marshall co., Ala. Pop. 50.

Arabah, ā-rā-bā (Arab. for "desert"), El (The Arabah), called also El Ghor, a valley in Arabia leading from the southern extremity of the Dead Sea to the northern end of the Gulf of Akabah. It is 112 miles long, and has the steep and lofty range of Mount Seir on the east, the western escarpment being less elevated. It is considered by geologists to be a continuation of the Jordan subsidence trough. The same name is given to the great desert between Babylon and Jerusalem.

Arabat, ar'ā-bā', a small place in the Crimea, on the Sea of Azov, 70 miles ENE. of Simferopol.

Arabat, a narrow tongue of land, 70 miles long, separating the Sea of Azov from the Putrid Sea. See SIVASH.

Arabat-el-Mad'fun', called also Mad'funeh, a village of Egypt, 6 miles from the W. bank of the Nile, 100 miles below Thebes, is on the site of the ancient Abydos. Here is a ruined Memnonium (temple of Seti I.), dedicated to Osiris.

Arabi, ar'a-bee, a post-village of Dooly co., Ga., 75 miles S. of Macon, on the Georgia Southern and Florida R. Pop. in 1900, 505.

Arabi, a post-village of St. Bernard parish, La., near the Gulf R., 5 miles E. of New Orleans, its banking site. Pop. in 1900, 1200.

Arabia, ā-rā'be-ā, called in poetical language Araby, ā-r'ā-be (Arab. Jazzerat el-Arab, jē-zer'et el-ā-rāb, i.e., "the Isle or Peninsula of the Arabs;" Turk. and Persian, Arabistan, ā-rāb-e-stān, i.e., "Arab country"), the great southwestern peninsula of Asia, separated from Africa by the Red Sea, and having E. the Persian Gulf and S. the Indian Ocean (Gulf of Aden). Its most southerly point—Ras Arak (Cape St. Anthony)—is in lat. 12° 35' N., lon. 43° 56' E. Thirty miles to the W. of it are the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb. The most eastern point is Ras al-Had, in lat. 23° 23' N., lon. 59° 55' E. A line drawn from the head of the Gulf of Suez to that of the Persian Gulf marks closely the limits of the Arabian peninsula on the N., but beyond or N. of this line extends a vast desert, which, being occupied chiefly by Arab tribes, is also called Arabia. It is bounded on the E. by the valley of the Euphrates, on the W. by the depressed tract in which lie the Jordan and the Dead Sea, while towards the N. it gradually contracts, till it terminates in about lat. 34°; so that Arabia, in a wider sense, extends in length from N. to S. through more than 21 degrees of latitude, or nearly 1500 miles. It includes also the peninsula of Sinai, between the Gulf of Suez and that of Akabah. The area does not fall short of 1,200,000 sq. m., of which 950,000 (or more) belong to independent Arabia, or Arabia not under Turkish jurisdiction.

Probably one-half of the country still remains unexplored. Taken collectively, Arabia is an arid, sunburnt wilderness, in which may be traced, here and there, some green spots which receive the benefit of rains; and the wadis or valleys, descending from the rain-collecting heights, figure as so many green lines, more or less strongly marked. But it is seldom that the tracts of cultivated land, even in the plains, attain a width of 20 miles.

Arabia is commonly divided into three parts: ARABIA FELIX, or happy; PETRÆA, or stony; and DESERTA, or desert. These names are unknown to the Arabians, to whom, in a general way, Arabia Deserta is Nejd, Arabia Petræa is Hejaz, and Arabia Felix is Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, and the Hama tract.

The great central mass of Arabia, which is comprised largely in the region of Nejd, is a vast table-land (or series of plateaus), irregularly cut by traversing mountain-ridges, which abut against and carries with it a part of the Syrian Desert on the N., and on the W. and SW. is buttressed up by lofty elevations, sometimes known as the Red Sea Mountains (Jebel el-Hejaz, Jebel Kora, Jebel el-Yemen), which, as in the Asir district south of Mecca, rise in many summits to 8000 feet and over. The Yemen uplands, in fact, tower to 10,000 feet, and it would appear that some of the peaks overlooking Sana may, indeed, reach 13,000 feet. The Nejd is largely bordered by the deserts of shifting sands, the Nefuds, and on the south it merges into the great inhospitable tracts known as Dakhna or Dahna. The mountains of the Sinaitic Peninsula are also lofty, and in many of their summits (Jebel-Katharine, Jebel-Gosh) exceed 8000 feet. The most famous of these is the Jebel-Musa, "Mountain of Moses," which for a long time was identified with the Mount Sinai of Scripture.

The cultivated tracts of Arabia are generally in the vicinity of the mountains, the torrents from which, in the rainy season, collect soil and endow it with fertility. There are also some oases or productive spots, surrounded by deserts, which seem to indicate that the waters of streams lost in the sands higher up are here brought to the surface.

The sterility of Arabia is sufficiently indicated when it is stated that that vast country has no considerable and scarcely any permanent rivers. A few small streams in Oman, as the Massora and Sib, flow throughout the year, but in most cases the water-courses are the wadis,—dry channels, or channels with intermittent flows. The largest of such are the Wady Dawair and Wady er-Rumma, both rising in the western highlands and trending northeastward into the interior, the former with, perhaps, a continuous course of 800 miles directed to the Shat el-Arab (united Tigris and Euphrates).

To the extreme dryness of the atmosphere and its freedom from cloud or vapor may be ascribed the remarkable degree of cold occasionally felt in Arabia, which has given rise to very erroneous conjectures respecting the elevation of that country. At Tayf, not above 3200 feet in absolute elevation, and in lat. 21° 12' N., snow is said to fall once in every four years; and the mountains in the neighborhood, from 5000 to 6000 feet high, are annually covered with snow. Farther S., ice and snow are of frequent occurrence on mountains from 6000 to 8000 feet in height; while on the opposite side of the Red Sea they are hardly known at the height of 12,000 feet. On the other hand, Muscat, on the coast of Oman, is nearly the hottest inhabited place on the globe,—a distinction which it owes in a measure to its situation beneath bare cliffs, which reverbate the heat. At this place the thermometer in the shade in June generally rises above 100° Fahr. in the afternoon, and occasionally it marks 115°–117°. The heat of Mecca, also, and the adjacent tchama, is to Europeans insupportable in summer. The violent changes of temperature which occur are prejudicial to health. The humid S. wind, the cold and dry N. wind, and the storms from the E., attended with clouds of fine sand, all bring with them the seeds of disease. The coast of Hejaz is to many particularly unhealthy, and the plague, from which Arabia for a long time boasted exemption, has been added to the list of endemic diseases. The climate of Yemen, on the other hand, where the temperature even in July rarely reaches 90°, is a particularly favorable one; and Palgrave describes that of the Nejd as one of the most salubrious in the world. Along a large part of the border tracts the rainfall is fairly or even largely abundant, being mostly concentrated in wet seasons of about three months' duration; and even in the interior considerable rain falls, but north of the 20th parallel of latitude the annual discharge is reduced to about 8 inches.

The flora of Arabia partakes of the character of the floras of northeastern Africa, India, and Armenia, with the Saharan type well emphasized. The date-palm is a physiognomic plant, and thrives even where the ground is covered with incrustations of salt. On the S. coast, towards Oman, the mango and cocconut are occasionally met with. Farther inland grow the fig-tree, the tamarind, the almond, and, in Oman, the orange, lemon, and citron. With these grow lavender, wormwood, jasmine, and other scented plants. As the mountains are ascended, the vegetation assumes a more European character. Apricots, plums, pomegranates, and grapes are found at the height of from 3000 to 4000 feet; and above these the mountains are covered with forests of juniper. The cotton-plant and the sugar-cane grow in the tchama or coast-lands; the gum arabic, aloe, and cassia prefer the hills; and the tree which yields frankincense abounds in the mountains of Shehr.

The Arabs cultivate wheat, rice, barley, and durrah or holcus vulgare, besides bananas, watermelons, and other garden-produce; but their chief dependence is on their date plantations. These occupy everywhere the irriguous or watered land. The cultivation of coffee was introduced into Arabia from southern Abyssinia; and the best coffee exported from Mocha, even at the present day, is the produce of Abyssinia. The most fertile region of Arabia is Yemen.

The trade in coffee, almonds, balsam, senna, and gums enriches a few proprietors, but the chief mercantile wealth of Arabia always has been derived from the carrying trade. The Arab is the active factor who distributes the cotton cloth of India throughout half-civilized Africa, and carries back ivory, gums, and dyewoods. The pearl-banks in the Persian Gulf extend from Bahrein E. above 200 miles, and give employment to many thousand men, yielding an annual product valued at about $1,500,000. There are also sponge-, coral- and pearl-fisheries in the Red Sea, on the coasts of Hejaz, and on the S. coasts the fishermen collect much ambergris and tortoise-shell.

Little is known of the mineral resources of Arabia, but it is certain that many forms of precious stones (emerald, carnelian) are found, and that the more valuable metals (iron, copper, lead) are not wanting. An attempt at gold-mining has been made in the Hadramaut.

Arabia is faunally an intermediate ground between the Sahara, India, and the Caspian steppe-region. Among its more conspicuous animal forms are the panther, lynx, hyena, jackal, various gaseles, tiger (in Oman), and ostrich. The donkey, sheep, goat, and various forms of cattle are reared, together with the dromedary and horse, the breed of Arabian horses being famous the world over.

It seems certain that the most ancient trade-routes of the Arabs nearly coincided with those followed in the days of the caliphs, when the caravans started from Bahrein for Bagdad, and thence crossed the Syrian deserts to Aleppo, Damascus, or Egypt. The establishment of the Mohammedan religion had the effect of reviving this branch of industry, for the pilgrimage to Mecca, which was enjoined on all true believers, drew crowds from all parts of the Mohammedan world. There are authentic accounts of caravans to Mecca which numbered 120,000 camels. The ordinary commercial caravans rarely exceed 1000 loaded camels.

Population and History.—The Arabs and the Jews constitute the two main branches of the Semitic race of to-day. According to a distinction based on tradition the tribes of Arabia are divided into Kahtanites or Joktanites, who claim descent from Kahtan (Joktan), and Ishmaelites, supposed to be descended from Ishmael. The former dwell in the S. and E.; the latter constitute the northern tribes. The inhabitants of the S. do not regard their northern neighbors as pure Arabs. Already in remote antiquity Arabia was the seat of advanced culture. In the S. were the flourishing realms of the Sabæans and Minæans. The Himyaritic (Sabæan) inscriptions reach back to the period which witnessed the birth of the Hebrew monarchy. Early in the seventh century of the Christian era, through the agency of a new national religion,—that of Islam,—Arabia was transformed from a country divided among warring tribes into a great conquering state. The old superstitions gave way to the monotheistic faith proclaimed by Mohammed. Mecca, with the pilgrimage place of the Kaaba, which had in a measure been a national bond between the clans, was adopted into the new religion. Arabic, the language of the Koran, became the speech of the whole peninsula. The Arabs embraced with fanatical zeal the task of spreading Islam. Syria, Palestine, Persia, Egypt, all of northern Africa to the Atlantic, and the Spanish peninsula were overrun by the invading Arab or Saracen hosts of the caliphs within less than 100 years after the Hégira (the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina in 622, which event marks the beginning of the Mohammedan era). The great Arab realm did not long remain united. In the middle of the eighth century Spain broke loose. About the same time Bagdad supplanted Damascus as the seat of the caliphs. Arabia itself soon ceased to play an important rôle in the great Mohammedan world and relapsed into obscurity and confusion. In the flourishing days of the caliphs the Arabs led the world in literature, art, and science, and they diffused their culture in remote lands. In the sixteenth century part of Arabia was subjected to Turkish rule. The eighteenth century witnessed the rise of the Wahabi state (see NABU). In 1839 the British obtained possession of Aden. The population of Arabia is estimated at about 3,000,000, of which about 1,000,000 fall to the districts of Hejaz and Yemen, which belong to the Ottoman Empire. El-Hassa is also included in the Turkish dominions. Oman is governed by the sultan or imam of Muscat.

Arabia, a post-village of Lawrence co., Ohio, about 14 miles NE. of Ironton.

Arabian Gulf, a name applied to the RED SEA.

Arabian Sea, a large sea, properly a part of the Indian Ocean, on the SW. coast of Asia, lying between the peninsula of Hindustan on the E. and Arabia on the W. The distance from the Arabian to the Indian coast may be, at the broadest part, about 1500 miles. The Red Sea and the shallow Persian Gulf are properly arms of the Arabian Sea. Soundings of 4000-5000 metres have been made in many parts.

Arabicus Sinus, a Latin name of the RED SEA.

Arabistan, an Oriental name of ARABIA and of the other regions where the Arabs dwell.

Arabistan, a province of Persia. See KHUZISTAN.

Ar'aby, a post-station of Frederick co., Md., on the Baltimore and Ohio R., 57 miles W. of Baltimore.

Araby, the poetical name of ARABIA.

Aracaju, á-rá-ká-zhoo', a seaport of Brazil, capital of the state of Sergipe, on the river Cotindiba, 6 miles from the sea and 15 miles below Maroim. It has a good anchorage, although the bar does not admit ships of more than 12 feet draught. Steamboats ply to Maroim. Chief exports are cotton, sugar, and hides. Pop. 10,000.

Aracan. See ARAKAN.

Aracati, or Aracaty, á-rá-ká-tee', a river-port of the state of Ceará, Brazil, about 70 miles SE. of Ceará (Fortaleza), on the Rio Jaguaribe ("river of jaguars"), 10 miles from the sea. Lat. 4° 31' S.; lon. 37° 48' W. It exports cotton, sugar, and hides. Pop. about 12,000.

Aracena, á-rá-thá-ná', a town of Spain, in Andalusia, province of Huelva, 33 miles NW. of Seville. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 6281.

Arachova, á-rá'ko-vá', a village of Greece, on the S. declivity of Mount Parnassus, 15 miles WNW. of Livadia. Pop. in 1898, 3224.

Araco'ma, a town of Logan co., W. Va. (formerly given as Logan). Pop. in 1900, 444.

Aracthus, the ancient name of ARTA.

Aracuahi, á-rá-swá-hee', a river of Brazil, state of Minas-Geraes, rises in the Serra Esmeralda, flows NE., and falls into the Jequitinhonha.

Arad, ár'ód', a town of Hungary, capital of the co. of Arad, on the right bank of the Maros, 145 miles SE. of Budapest. Pop. in 1901, 56,260, among them many Rumanians and Germans. It is a royal free city and an old fortress. On the opposite bank of the Maros is the small town of New Arad (Hun. Új-Arad). Arad is at the junction of a number of railway lines and is the great emporium of trade in SE. Hungary. Its principal edifices are of modern construction. On the Liberty Square is a monument to the patriots of 1848-49. The town possesses one of the largest distilleries in the world, on whose refuse thousands of cattle are fattened. The flour of Arad is highly prized. On Oct. 6, 1849, a number of Hungarian generals were executed here by order of the Austrian commander Haynau.

Arad, a county of Hungary, bordering on Transylvania. Area, 2437 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 329,840.

Aradeo, á-rá-dá'o, a town of Italy, province of Lecce, 10 miles ENE. of Gallipoli. Pop. 3500.

Aradus, the ancient name of RUAD.

Arafali, á-rá-fá'le, a town of northeast Africa, in Eritrea, on a bay of the Red Sea. Lat. about 15° 5' N.

Arafat, á-rá-fát', or Jebel er-Rahm, jéb'el ér ráh'm (i.e., "the mountain of mercy"), a granite hill of Arabia, 13 miles E. of Mecca. It is about 1 or 1½ miles in circuit, and its summit is nearly 200 feet above the level of the plain. It is one of the principal objects of pilgrimage to Mohammedans, who affirm that it was the place where Adam first received his wife Eve, after they had been expelled from Paradise and separated from each other 120 years.

Arafura (á-rá-foo'rá) Sea, that part of the Pacific which lies N. of Australia and is partly enclosed by Papua, the Aru Islands, Timor Laut, Timor, etc.

Aragh (or Pentecost) Island, one of the group of the New Hebrides, in about lat. 16° S. Pop. 500.

Ar'ago, a post-village of Richardson co., Neb., on the Missouri River, 5 miles from Craig, Mo., and about 85 miles below Nebraska City. Pop. about 100.

Arago, Cape, formerly Cape Gregory, Oregon, is on the Pacific, in Coos co., lat. 43° 21' N. and lon. 124° 29' W. Cape Arago light is on an island joined to the cape by a bridge.

Aragon, ár'ra-gon (Sp. pron. ar-ná-gón'; L. Arágo-nia), a captaincy-general of Spain, representing the ancient kingdom of Aragon, bounded N. by France, E. by Catalonia, S. by Valencia and New Castile, and W. by the Castiles and Navarre. Area, about 18,000 sq. m. It is divided into the provinces of Huesca, Saragossa, and Teruel. The capital is Saragossa. Aragon is encompassed by the Pyrenees and the sierras of Morella, Albarracin, Molina, and Soria, while offsets of these chains traverse the interior in all directions. Several of the highest summits of the Pyrenees are in this region, their tops covered with perpetual snow. Their sides are clothed with forests, while lower down are rich and extensive pastures, with many beautiful and fertile valleys. The largest level tract is formed by the valley of the Ebro, which, entering on the W., flows SE., dividing the region into two nearly equal parts. The Guadalquivir, the Júcar, and the Tagus have their sources in the extreme S., and the Aragon in the NW. A large part of Aragon is a treeless, almost desert, waste, having the characteristics of the table-land of Castile. It is the fundament of an ancient saline sea, which occupied the basin of the (modern) Ebro, an outlet to which was subsequently established by a cut across the mountain-barrier at Tortosa. On the mountains, and especially among the Pyrenees, the climate is cold, but becomes much warmer in the valley-plains, which are often parched by a withering heat. High and piercing winds from the NW. and SE. prevail. The flora of Aragon is varied and extensive. Its minerals are marbles, jaspers, coal, copper, iron, lead, quicksilver, cobalt, sulphur, and alum. Extensive tracts are stony and barren, while others, though capable of cultivation, are neglected. Still, excellent crops are obtained of grain, olives, grapes and other fruit, saffron, flax, and hemp. The woollen industry is important and silk-worms are reared in considerable numbers. Pop. in 1900, 912,711. The kingdom of Aragon was founded in 1035. Catalonia was united with it in 1151. Later, Aragon became mistress successively of Sicily, Sardinia, and the kingdom of Naples. By the marriage of Ferdinand of Aragon with Isabella of Castile in 1474, the two kingdoms were united in 1479. In 1512 the greater part of Navarre was annexed to Aragon. —Adj. and inhab. ARAGONIAN, ár'ra-gó-neer'.

Aragón, a river of Spain, rises in the Pyrenees, in Aragon, and, flowing through Navarre, joins the Ebro opposite Alfaro, after a SW. course of 80 miles. Chief affluent, the Argá.

Aragón, a post-village of Polk co., Ga., on the East and West and the Southern R. Pop. about 225. The banking point is Cedartown.

Arágona, á-rá-go'ná', a town of Sicily, 7½ miles NNE. of Girgenti. Pop. in 1901, 11,985. It has a castle with paintings and antiquities. Near it is the mud volcano of Maocaluba.

Aragua, á-rá-gwá', a state of Venezuela, having Miranda on the E. and Carabobo and Zamora on the W. Capital, Victoria. It contains part of the fertile coffee-producing Aragua valley in the N.

Aragua, a town of Venezuela, in the state of Bermudes, 175 miles ESE. of Caracás, on the river Unare.

Araguai, a river of South America. See PILOOWAVE.

Araguari, á-rá-gwá-ree', a river of Brazil, in the state of Pará, rises in the Serra de Tumacraque and falls into the Atlantic in lat. 1° 50' N.

Araguay, á-rá-gwá', or Araguaya, á-rá-gwá'á, a large river of Brazil, rises in the mountains near lat. 18° 10' S., lon. 52° 40' W. It flows northward between the states of Goyas and Matto-Grosso and joins the Tocantins at São João, after a course of 1300 miles, about the middle of which it separates into two arms, enclosing the island of Bananal ("Banana Grove"), 200 miles in length, and covering an area of 8000 sq. m. This river flows through about 12 degrees of latitude, and is navigable 750 miles or more. The lower course of the stream, which is the main water of the Tocantins, is badly obstructed by rapids.

Arahal, El, el á-rá-hál', a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 23 miles SSE. of Sevilla. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 7981.

Araish, a town of Morocco. See EL-ARASH.

Ara Jovis, the ancient name of ARANJUEZ.

Arakan, or Aracan, ár-rá-kan' or á-rá-kán' (called by the natives Rakkhaing, rá-king'), the northern part of Lower Burma, extending along the E. side of the Bay of Bengal to the N. of the Irrawaddy delta. It was formerly one of the political divisions of British Burma, and was acquired by the British at the close of the first Burmese War, in 1826. The chief town is Akyab.

Arakan, an ancient city of Arakan, on the river Arakan, 50 miles from the sea. Lat.  $20^{\circ} 35' N.$ ; lon.  $93^{\circ} 4' E.$  Before the British conquest it is said to have had a population of nearly 100,000, but it has dwindled to an insignificant little place.

Arakan River rises in Burma, and, after a generally southward course of 200 miles, enters the Bay of Bengal in Arakan, 15 miles NE. of Akyab.

Arakan-Roma, a mountain or portion of a mountain-chain on the borders of Arakan and Bengal. Blue Mountain is about 7000 feet in elevation.

Aral, a post-hamlet of Butler co., Kan., 20 miles SW. of Eldorado.

Aral, a post-hamlet of Carroll co., Va., on a branch of Reed Creek, 8 miles N. of Hillsville.

Aral (Aral; Russ. pron. á-rál') Sea, an extensive lake in Asiatic Russia, between about lat.  $43^{\circ} 42'$  and  $47^{\circ} 0' N.$  and lon.  $58^{\circ} 18'$  and  $61^{\circ} 46' E.$  Excepting the Caspian, from which it lies 150-200 miles E., and from which it is separated by the plateau of Ust-Urt, and the Victoria Nyansa, of east-central Africa, it is the largest inland sea of the Eastern Hemisphere. Total area, 26,100 sq. m. Its length is 235 miles. It had for many years been diminishing in area, but the Russian explorations of 1899-1903 have shown that the waters have risen since 1891, the rise at the present time being about 20 centimetres annually. The depth of water in the centre is 70-80 feet, but increases to a maximum of 205 feet opposite the steep west coast. The lake, which is slightly saline but strikingly transparent, abounds in fish, especially sturgeon, carp, and herring. Seals are also met with. The W. shore of the Aral Sea is formed by the Ust-Urt plateau, which rises to 600 feet above the level of the lake, but shelves gradually down to the water. No rivers enter the sea on its W. shore; those that enter from the E. and S. are the Sir-Darya or Jaxartes and the Amu-Darya or Oxus. The waters freeze in winter in the north, and partly also in the south. The Aral Sea lies between the Kirghis steppes and Khiva, in the great depression of western Asia. Its elevation is 160 feet above the level of the sea and 243 feet above that of the Caspian, with which it was still in the Post-Pliocene period united. The shores of the sea are almost entirely uninhabited. There is no outlet.

This lake is called by the Kirghis ARAL-DENGHIS,—i.e., "island sea" (aral signifying "island"), from the multitude of islands which it contains; the largest of these is Nikolai.

Aramecima, á-rá-má-sé-na, a town and mining district of Honduras, in Choluteca.

Aramin'go, formerly a district of Philadelphia co., Pa., but now included within the limits of the city of Philadelphia, about 4½ miles N. by E. of the state-house.

Aramon, á-rá-món', a town of France, department of Gard, on the Rhone, 16 miles ENE. of Nîmes. It has a trade in wine, olives, and oil. Pop. about 2500.

Arám, á-rán', a valley of Spain, province of Lérida, surrounded by the elevated summits of the Pyrenees and exposed to dangerous avalanches.

Aranda de Duero, á-rán-dá dá dwá-ro, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 48 miles S. of Burgos, on the Douro. It retains part of its ancient walls and towers. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 5736.

Aram'das, a village of Mexico, in the state of Jalisco. Pop. in 1895, 5367.

Arán Isles, or South Islands of Aran, a group of small islands on the coast of Galway, Ireland. Lat. of light on Inishmore, the largest and most northerly,  $53^{\circ} 7' 38'' N.$ ; lon.  $9^{\circ} 42' 22'' W.$  Pop. 3300. The NORTH ISLANDS OF ARAN comprise the group called the Rosses, off the NW. coast of Ireland, co. of Donegal.

Aranjuez, á-rán-nwéth' (anc. A'ra Jo'mis), a town and royal residence of Spain, on the left bank of the Tagus, in New Castile, 28 miles SSE. of Madrid. Pop. of the commune in 1900, 12,670. The royal palace stands in the midst of one of the most magnificent parks in the world. The town contains hotels, cafés, and numerous public gardens, spacious streets and elegant squares, theatres and bull-rings.

Aransas, ar-an'sas, a small river of Texas, rises in Bee co., and, flowing southeastward, forms the boundary between San Patricio co. on one side and Refugio co. on the other, until it empties itself into Aransas Bay.

Aransas, a county of Texas, bounded SE. by the Gulf of Mexico, and comprising most of the lands adjacent to Aransas Bay. Area, 295 sq. m. Stock-raising is the chief industry. Capital, Rockport. Pop. in 1890, 1824; in 1900, 1716.

Ararat, á-rá-rat', a craterless volcano of western Asia, in Armenia, forming the point of contact of Russia with Turkey and Persia, to each of which it partly belongs. It lies in the S. portion of the extensive plain of the Aras, and consists of two mountains, the Great Ararat (Aghri-Dagh) on the NW. and the Little Ararat (Kutchuk-Aghri-Dagh) on the SE., their summits being about 7 miles apart. The summit of the Great Ararat lies in lat.  $39^{\circ} 42' N.$ , lon.  $44^{\circ} 32' E.$ , and is 17,090 feet (or 16,910 feet, according to another determination) above the sea-level and about 14,200 feet above the plain of the Aras. The NE. slope of the mountain is about 14 miles in length, and the SW. slope about 20 miles. On the former, visible even from Erivan, 32 miles distant, is a deep, orator-like chasm. The mountain is covered with perpetual snow for about 4500 feet of its upper height, but it would seem to carry no glaciers, although these had at one time been reported. There are no large forest trees on Ararat, but the lighter vegetation continues to about 11,000 feet, beyond which begins the pasture tract (to about 13,000 feet), followed by the strictly Alpine flora. Little Ararat rises 13,100 (or 12,840?) feet above the sea-level, and is free from snow in September and October. Its declivities are greater and steeper than those of the Great Ararat, and its almost conical form is marked with furrows, that radiate downward from its summit. Ararat is one of the Asiatic mountains that are associated with the tradition of Noah's ark. The top of Great Ararat was first reached in 1829 by Parrot.

Araucania, â-raw-kâ-ne-â, or Araucana (Sp. pron. â-rôw-kâ'nâ), the name of a former region of Chile, S. of the river Biobio, and now mainly comprised in the provinces of Arauco and Valdivia (lying between the Andes and the Pacific Ocean). The distinctive inhabitants of this region, the Araucanians, are war-like, but humane towards the vanquished, besides being courteous and hospitable. They are enthusiastic lovers of liberty and maintained the independence of their country for centuries by their indomitable courage and singular aptitude for war, but they have mostly submitted to the Chilean authority, and their numbers are much reduced (about 50,000). They are good agriculturists and devote much attention to stock-breeding. Polygamy obtains among them. They acknowledge a Supreme Being, whom they believe to be attended by some inferior deities. They believe also in the immortality of the soul. A French adventurer by the name of Touens proclaimed himself king of Araucania and Patagonia in 1861, under the title of Orlélie Antoine I., and sought to maintain himself by arms against the Chileans. He died in France in 1878.

Area, about 331,600 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 347,509. It includes part of Karelia and of Russian Lapland, also the islands of Nova Zembla. The White Sea occupies a large space in its centre. The principal rivers, from W. to E., are the Onega, Dvina, Mesen, and Petchora. The province is, for the most part, one continuous flat, and nearly an unvaried scene of desolation and sterility in the northern parts, where the ground remains frozen for nine months in the year. Nor are the southern portions everywhere much more inviting. Here meagre pastures, marshes, swamps, and extensive forests occupy nearly all the surface, leaving but little for cultivation. Almost the only crops raised are hemp, flax, potatoes, and some rye, neither the climate nor the soil admitting of the cultivation of oats or wheat. The climate is excessively cold in winter and hot in summer, with sudden transitions between the two extremes. Fishing and the hunting of fur-bearing animals, of which a great variety abound on land and sea, are the chief occupations of the inhabitants. Arcidosse, an-che-dos'-so, a town of Italy, province of Grosseto, 8 miles W. by N. of Radicefani. Pop. 2000 (commune, about 8000).

Arcisate, an-che-sá'tá, a village of Italy, in Como, 3 miles NNE. of Varese, near Lake Lugano.

Arcis-sur-Aube, an'see-sú'-sh, a town of France, department of Aube, on the Aube, 16 miles N. by E. of Troyes. It is noted for an engagement between Napoleon and the Allies, March 20-21, 1814. Pop. about 2750.

Arco, an'ko, a town of Austria-Hungary, Tyrol, 8 miles W. of Boveredo, on the Sarca. Pop. about 4000. Its comparatively mild winter climate, due to its sheltered location, attracts invalids.

Arcola, an'-ko-lá, an ancient town of Italy, province of Genoa, noted for its wines. Pop. 2000 (commune, 9000).

Arcola, ar-ko-lá, a post-village of Bullock co., Ga., about 13 miles (direct) SE. of Statesboro. Pop. about 220.

Arcola, a banking city of Douglas co., Ill., on the Illinois Central R., 35 miles ESE. of Decatur. It has manufactures of brooms, cigars, carriages, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1905.

Arcola, a post-village of Allen co., Ind., on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago R., 8 miles NW. of Fort Wayne. Pop. about 250.

Arcola, a post-village of Tangipahoa parish, La., 4 miles N. of Amite. Pop. 250.

Arcola, a post-village of Washington co., Miss., in a fertile farming region, on the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley R., 71 miles N. of Vicksburg. Pop. about 175.

Arcola, a post-village of Dade co., Mo., 35 miles SE. of Nevada.

Arcola, a post-hamlet of Warren co., N.C., about 50 miles NE. of Raleigh.

Arcola, a post-station of Montgomery co., Pa., on the Perkiomen R., 3 miles N. of Perkiomen Junction.

Arcola, a post-station of Fort Bend co., Tex., 21 miles S. of Houston.

Arcola, a post-station of Loudoun co., Va., about 30 miles W. of Washington, D.C.

Arcola, a post-hamlet of Laramie co., Wyo., 20 miles E. of Cheyenne.

Arcole, an'-ko-lá, a village of Italy, 15 miles ESE. of Verona, on an affluent of the Adige. Pop. about 1250 (commune, 3000). Arcole is celebrated for the victory gained there by Napoleon over the Austrians, Nov. 15-17, 1796.

Arcona, ar-ko-ná, a hamlet of Jewell co., Kan., 45 miles S. by W. of Edgar, Neb.

Arconate, an-ko-ná'tá, a village of Italy, province of Milan, 11 miles NNW. of Abbiategrasso. Pop. about 1700.

Arconsat, an'-kón-sá, a village of France, in Puy-de-Dôme, 9 miles E. of St. Remy.

Arcore, an'-ko-rá, a village of Italy, province of Milan, 4 miles NE. of Monza. Pop. about 1500.

Arcos de la Frontera, an'-kooe dá lá fron-tá'rá, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 30 miles NE. of Cadiz, on an elevated rock near the Guadalete. The addition of la Frontera ("of the frontier or limit") was derived from its position on the old Moorish frontier. It was formerly strongly fortified. There are many old convents, and the principal church is a fine Gothic edifice. Near the town is the partially ruined castle of the dukes of Arcos. Chief manufactures, leather (which is in high repute), caps, hats, caparo grass work, thread, and ropes. Arcos is the Colonia Arcensium of the Romans. Pop. of the commune in 1900, 13,926.

Arcos de Valle do Vez, an'-kooe dá vá'l lá do vez, a village of Portugal, 15 miles N. of Braga.

Arcoí, ar'-oot (North and South), two contiguous maritime districts of British India, presidency of Madras, comprising the whole country from Coleroon River on the S. to the frontier of the Nellore district on the N., and E. of Cuddapah, Mysore, and Salem, with the exception of the Chingleput district, lying round Madras. Pop. about 4,500,000. Surface, low near the sea; inland, hilly, with extensive jungles. Chief rivers, the Coleroon and Palar; on the NE. coast is the Pulicat lake. Chief towns are Arcoí, Vellore, and Cuddalore. Arcoí was ceded in 1801 to the East India Company.

Arcoí, or Arucati, á-roo-ká'tee, a city, formerly the Mohammedan capital of the Carnatic, on the Palar, 65 miles WSW. of Madras. Lat. 12° 54' N.; lon. 79° 22' E. It figured in the struggle between the French and English in India, and was ceded to the East India Company in 1801. The town is inhabited chiefly by Mohammedans. Pop. about 11,000.

Arcs, Les, a village of France. See Les Arcs.

Arctic, or Arctic City, a mining camp of Alaska, 163° W. on the Koyukuk River, and near the Arctic Circle and lon. 163° W.

Arctic, a manufacturing village of Kent co., R.I., on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 12 miles SW. of Providence. It has a large cotton-factory. Pop. about 800.

Arctica, or the Arctic Regions, a name now frequently applied by geographers to all that portion of the earth's surface, land and water, that lies north of the Arctic Circle, and by a vague extension to parts of the sub-arctic regions which in their conditions of climate and physiography partake of the character of the region lying to the north. Its land-masses comprise parts of Norway, Sweden, Russia, Siberia, Alaska, Canada, and Greenland, and the various disjointed lands and islands which form the Arctic Archipelago of America, besides Spitzbergen, Nova Zembla, and Franz-Josef Land. The most northerly piece of land in this tract so far known lies north of Greenland, its position having been determined by Peary (1900) to be lat. 83° 39' N. (Cape Morris Jesup). Whether or not other lands will be discovered to lie still nearer to the Pole is an inquiry which direct exploration alone can solve. There are, however, strong grounds for concluding, from the evidence brought by the drift of the "Fram" (the vessel of the Nansen expedition), the southwardly bearing current that was encountered by Parry and others north of Spitzbergen, and the unstable and shifting pack of the Lincoln Sea, that the major portion of the North Polar Sea is open, in the sense, at least, that the water movements are not extensively hindered by obstructing land-masses. An open Polar sea in the manner that it was conceived by Hayes—i.e., a sea almost wholly free of ice—does certainly not exist; but recent researches show that the sea is not so solidly or immovably frozen as it had generally been thought to be. In its remarkable journey from the New Siberian Islands to Spitzbergen the "Fram" was carried to the extreme latitude of 85° 57', or to within 280 miles of the Pole. This is much the highest point ever reached by vessel in the Arctic Sea.

The disjointed land-masses of Arctica are strictly continental, since they are in the main merely disrupted parts of what was formerly, and even in a comparatively recent (Middle Tertiary) geological period, a united whole. The extinct floras and basaltic outflows of Greenland, Spitzbergen, Franz-Josef Land, etc., plainly show this former connection. It would seem that at this period the Arctic basin was completely closed off from the Atlantic, just as at a probably much later period it was still closed off from the Pacific by the union with Siberia by what is to-day known as the Prince of Wales or Seward Peninsula. The orographic relations of the Arctic tract are still very imperfectly known. The highest point of land appears to be some portion of the Greenland ice-cap (9000-10,000 feet), as Petermann Peak, in the east of Greenland, formerly thought to exceed 10,000 feet, appears from the more recent measurements of Nathorst to be not over 9000 feet.

Much of the region of Arctica is buried beneath a permanent snow- or ice-cap, which attains its greatest development in Greenland, there constituting the plateau, 7000-9000 feet in elevation, of the great "inland ice." This is much the largest piece of continuous snow or ice on the globe outside of the Antarctic tracts, and levels, by its vast accumulation, all the basal orographic features of the country. The valleys have been filled up to the summits of their bounding walls, and over these the deposit is still in most or many places several thousand feet deep. (See GREENLAND.) From this vast ice-cap radiate off thousands of glaciers, a very large number of which reach the sea, and there detach the fragments that float off as free-swimming icebergs. The bergs of the North Atlantic are practically all derived from this source. Many of the glaciers debouche into the sea with a width of from 10 to 20 miles, notably those entering Melville Bay; and one, the Humboldt Glacier, entering Kane Basin from the northwest of Greenland, has been said, although probably incorrectly, to have a width of 60 miles. Some of these travel with a velocity of from 30 to 70 feet a day, a marked contrast to the sluggish movement of the Alpine glaciers. Icebergs are almost incredibly numerous off the coast of Greenland, and they not rarely attain a length of two or more miles, with a height above water of 200-300 feet. They have been known to lie "stranded" on the bottom in water of 200 fathoms and more. The Arctic pack, or pack-ice, consists of vast fields, frequently many miles across, which are at times stable and united, at other times moving in the course of drift- and wind-currents. It is this great pack, with a thickness of from 10 to 25 feet—and where heaped up into hummocks, of still greater development—which has hitherto been the chief barrier set to Polar exploration. An effort made to force it, in 1901, by means of the Russian ice-breaker, the "Yermak," under the direction of its designer, Admiral Makaroff, proved unsuccessful.

The climate of Arctica is marked by the extreme of winter cold, but the summer sun gives out a genial warmth, which permits of a rapid and even luxuriant vegetable growth in favored regions. During the months of July and August, even as far north as the 80th parallel, a shade temperature of 50°-60° is not infrequent, and in the lower latitudes the mercury not rarely marks 80° and more. The Russian traveller Von Toll noted a July temperature of 93° on the borders of the Arctic Sea, in Siberia, in lat. 73° N.; and it is claimed that an official thermometer marked 100°-103° on the Yukon River, in Alaska, at its crossing of the Arctic Circle, near Fort Yukon. The extreme of winter cold over the oceanic tract is about -72°, which was recorded by the expeditions of Kane and Markham. The lowest temperature recorded by Nansen during his long traverse was -58°. In the valley of the middle Yukon, both in Alaska and the Northwest Territory of Canada, a temperature of -76° has been noted; but this is still considerably higher than the lowest registry at Verkhoyansk, in Siberia, just within the Arctic Circle, of -94°, which is the lowest natural temperature that has ever been recorded. At Yakutsk, also, in the region of greatest cold of Siberia, but lying somewhat outside of the Arctic Circle, a minimum of -76° to -88° is almost annually reported.

Vegetable Life.—No part of the Arctic regions, except where covered by perpetual snow or ice or in locally unfavorable positions, is entirely destitute of vegetation. A fairly luxuriant flora, with a beautiful display of flowers, is the covering of the lowlands nearly to the furthest point that has been attained by man. A carpet of poppy, saxifrage, crowfoot, mountain-pink, soury-grass, draba, etc., is the delight of the eye even on the line of the 82d parallel of latitude, and with these in many places are to be seen clumps of the dwarf birch and Arctic willow, tressets of hardly 12-18 inches height. This flora is largely circumpolar, presenting itself under nearly the same form in almost all the positions of high latitude. Forest trees extend in many parts to the 68th and 70th parallels of latitude, and in Siberia (pines, larches) they follow the bottomland of the rivers, as along the Khatanga, to 72°, or close to 73°, the highest point north that is attained by trees. In the whole of Greenland there are no trees that exceed 20 feet in height, and this development is found only in a few isolated spots in the far south. In central and northern Greenland the dwarf birch, willow, and alder take the place of the forest. At Patut, Atanekrdluk, etc., of the west coast, as also in various parts of the Arctic Archipelago, in Spitzbergen, etc., remains of a vast extinct flora, representing parts of the Cretaceous and Tertiary periods, give evidence of a floral and climatic condition wholly different from what prevails to-day. There flourished here, under 70°, forests, or at least large coepes, of poplar, sycamore, beech, alder, willow, laurel, ginko, cedar, and redwood (Sequoia), all indicating the former existence of a moderately high-growing vegetation in locations where hardly more than a minimum is found to-day. It is, however, not safe to conclusively argue from this a radical climatic change, since certain deciduous trees, even of good stature, extend in some parts to nearly lat. 69°. McConnell found the aspen forming part of the woodland in the region of the Northwest Territory of Canada, 300 miles north of Dawson (or beyond lat. 68°). Much more conclusive evidence of climatic change is, however, furnished by the fossil floral-beds (Tertiary) of Lady Franklin Bay, opposite Greenland, in lat. 81° 45'—the most northerly coal deposits of the globe.

Animal Life.—There is every reason to believe that there is no part of the Arctic regions, except in such desolate snow-covered tracts as the interior of Greenland, where animal life in one form or another is not to be found. The waters almost everywhere teem with life, but the higher types exhibit a marked deficiency in specific and varietal forms and an equally marked numerical decrease as the higher latitudes are approached. A small codfish (Gadus polaris) is perhaps the most distinctively Arctic type of fish. Birds are limited in species, but as individuals they are exceedingly abundant in the rookeries or bird-rocks of Greenland, Spitzbergen, and Franz-Josef Land, where the little-auks, doves, guillemots, fulmars, and kittiwakes congregate in tens of thousands. Sverdrup met with the skua as far north as lat. 85° and the snow-bunting in 84°, and Nansen expresses the belief that in summer straggling birds may be found everywhere inside the Polar basin. This observer met with fresh fox-tracks on the ice of the Polar Sea in lat. 85° and bear-tracks at about lat. 83°. Several species of seal are very abundant in the Arctic waters, and at least one, the ringed seal (Phoca hispida), penetrates quite to the 85th parallel of latitude, sharing company there with the narwhal, or sea-unicorn, among cetaceans. Whales have been met with beyond the 83d parallel of latitude. One of the most distinctive of the Arctic quadrupeds is the walrus, which in some parts, as in Kane Basin and the waters generally of northwest Greenland, is still abundant along the edge of the ice. The reindeer, which in the same species occupies the north of both hemispheres, is both an Arctic and subarctic animal, differing in this respect from the musk-ox, whose habitat is distinctly the far north. The discovery of this animal by Peary in the land of northern Greenland lying beyond the ice-cap, subsisting on the scant vegetation which comes to the surface only in the summer-time, and of tracks of the same animal near Cape Morris Jesup, beyond 83° 30', adds a most interesting page to the subject of zoogeography.

Arctic People.—The lower parts of the Arctic tract are inhabited by various peoples, such as the Lapps of Norway, the Samoyeds, Yakuts, Tchukchis, and Tunguses of Russia and Siberia, and various tribes of Indians in Alaska. The Eskimos, whose range extends, although discontinuously, from Alaska to Greenland, with some outlying colonies in the N.E. of Siberia, are pre-eminently the true Polar people, being found inhabiting Greenland to and beyond the 78th parallel of latitude (Sonntag Bay). Remains of earlier habitation of these people have been found by explorers in the land opposite Greenland (Grinnell Land) almost as far north as lat. 82°.

The following is a brief record of the progress of Arctic discovery:

- Voyage of discovery by Barentz, 1596-97.
- Henry Hudson, 1607, attaining 80° 23'.
- Scoreby, 1806, east of Greenland, 81° 30'.
- Perry, 1827, north of Spitzbergen, 82° 45'.
- John Ross, 1829-33, location of the North Magnetic Pole, 70° 5', determined by James Clark Ross (1831).
- Franklin, 1845-47, in quest of the Northwest Passage.
- McClure and McClintock, 1860-64, making of the Northwest Passage.
- Kane, 1852-55, search after Sir John Franklin.
- Hayes, 1860, exploration of the north Greenland waters.
- Hall, 1870-73, expedition of the "Polaris," 82° 16'.
- Weyprecht and Payer, 1872-74, discovery of Franz-Josef Land.
- Nares, 1875-76, expedition of the "Alert" and "Discovery," 83° 30' (position reached by Commander Markham).
- Nordenfjöld, 1878-79, making of the Northeast Passage.
- De Long, 1879-81, expedition of the "Jeannette."
- Greely, 1881-84, exploration of Grinnell Land and the north of Greenland, 83° 24' (position attained by Lockwood and Brainard).

Arden (see ARDEN, England) has been held by some to be the Forest of Ardennes.

Ardennes, a department in the NE. of France, formed of the N. part of the old province of Champagne and a small part of the provinces of Picardy and French Flanders, having on the N. and NE. Belgian Luxembourg and on the W., S. and E. the departments of Aisne, Marne, and Meuse. Area, 2020 sq. m. It is watered by the Meuse, Aisne, Bar, and Aire. The surface rises to considerable elevations in the "forests" of Ardennes and Argonne. The climate is generally cold and humid. The department contains iron-mines, slate- and marble-quarries, potter's clay, and sand. Abundance of corn is raised in the rich valleys. Capital, Mézières. Pop. in 1901, 315,589.

Ardenna, an-dén-no, a village of Italy, in the Valtellina, 12 miles W. of Sondrio. Pop. 700 (commune, 2000).

Ardentes, an-dönt, a village of France, department of Indre, on the Indre, 6 miles SE. of Châteauroux.

Ardella, a post-village of Stoddard co., Mo. Pop. about 100.

Ardes, ard, a village of France, department of Puy-de-Dôme, on the Coura, 10 miles SW. of Issoire.

Ardesio, an-dá-se-o, an ancient village of Italy, province of Bergamo. Pop. 800. It has marble-quarries.

Ardestan, an-de-stán, or Ardistan, a town of Persia, 86 miles NE. of Isfahan. Pop. estimated at 10,000.

Ardetz, a village of the Grisons, Switzerland, 4 miles from Tarasp. Near it is the ruin of Steinberg. Elevation, 4812 feet. Pop. about 750.

Ardfert, a village and parish of Ireland, in Munster, co. of Kerry, 4 miles NW. of Tralee. Pop. about 250.

Ardinam, a village of Ireland, co. of Tipperary, on the Suir, 64 miles SW. of Clonmel. Pop. 500.

Ardglass, a seaport town of Ireland, co. of Down, on the Irish Sea, 6 miles SE. of Downpatrick. Pop. of town, about 750, chiefly engaged in fisheries. It once had a considerable commerce.

Ardistan, a town of Persia. See ARDESTAN.

Ardmore, a village and watering-place of Waterford, Ireland, 6 miles from Youghal.

Ardmore, a banking post-town of the Chickasaw Nation, I.T., on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé R., 98 miles N. by R. of Fort Worth, Tex. It has cotton-compresses, and in the vicinity are extensive coal-mines and asphalt deposits. It is the seat of Hargrove College. Pop. in 1900, 5681.

Ardmore, a post-village of Macon co., Mo., on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas R., 7 miles (direct) SW. of Macon, its banking point. Pop. about 300.

Ardmore, a banking residential post-town of Montgomery co., Pa., on the Pennsylvania R., 8 miles from its terminus in Philadelphia. It has many fine villas. Pop. in 1900, 2205.

Ardmore, a post-hamlet of Fall River co., S. Dak.

Ardmaglass' Bay, an inlet on the W. coast of Ireland, in Connaght, co. of Sligo. It extends inland for 6 miles and receives the Owenbeg River, and at its head is the town of Ballysadare.

Ardnamurchan (an-nd-mür-kan) Point, a cape in Scotland, the westernmost point of the mainland of Britain. It has a light-house. Lat. 56° 43' 45" N.

Ardoch, an-dok, a village of Scotland, co. of Perth, 4 miles SSW. of Muthill. It is noted for the remains of a Roman camp.

Ardoch, an-dok, a banking post-town of Walsh co., N. Dak., on the Great Northern R., 25 miles NNW. of Grand Forks. Pop. in 1900, 298.

Ardore, an-do-ri, a town of Italy, province of Reggio di Calabria, SW. of Gerace. Pop. 2000 (commune, 6000).

Ardoye, an-dwá, a market-town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, 16 miles SW. of Bruges. Pop. 6000.

Ardres, an-dr, a town of France, department of Pas-de-Calais, 10 miles by rail SE. of Calais. Pop. about 1250 (commune, 2500). Near this was held in 1520 the celebrated interview of the "Field of the Cloth of Gold," between Henry VIII. and Francis I.

Ardrihaig, a village and port of Scotland, in Argyllshire, on Loch Gilp and the Crinan Canal, 19 miles SSW. of Inverary. Pop. about 1500.

Ardrossan, an-dros-an, a seaport and summer-resort of Scotland, co. and 16 miles NW. of Ayr, on the Firth of Clyde, opposite the Isle of Arran. It is a fashionable bathing-place. Pop. of the police burgh in 1901, 5933.

Ard'sley, an urban district of the West Riding of Yorkshire, England, on the Dearne, 24 miles from Barnsley. It has coal-mines. Pop. in 1901, 6226.—Also, an urban district of the West Riding of Yorkshire, constituted by the villages ARDSLEY EAST and ARDSLEY WEST, 3 miles from Wakefield. It has coal, iron, and woollen industries. Pop. in 1901, 7477.

Ard'sley, a post-village and fashionable suburban resort of Westchester co., N.Y., on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 1 mile from Dobbs Ferry. Pop. 400.

Ard'straw, a parish of Ireland, in Ulster, co. of Tyrone, comprising the town of Newtown-Stewart and the villages of Ardstraw and Douglas Bridge.

Arduenna Sylva, the ancient name of ARDENNES.

Ard'wick, a former suburb of Manchester, England.

Areas, á-rá'ish, or São Miguel das Areas, sôw-ma-gêh' dâsh á-rá'ish, a town of Brazil, in the state of São Paulo, 110 miles NW. of Rio de Janeiro.

Arecibo, á-rá-see'no, a seaport of Porto Rico, in a district of the same name, and capital of the department of Arecibo. It is on the Arecibo River near the sea, 40 miles by rail W. of San Juan. The roadstead is exposed to N. and NE. winds, and only small vessels can load here. It has a fine church and public buildings, plaza, regular streets, theatre, jail, etc. Pop. in 1899, 8008. It was much damaged by a hurricane in 1899. Arecibo department has a population of 160,000; area, 621 sq. m., of which 158 are under cultivation.

Arecibo River, or Rio Grande de Arecibo, a river of Porto Rico, rises in the central mountain-chain near Adjuntas, flows N., receiving the Tanamá River from the left, and empties into the Atlantic N. of Arecibo. It is a narrow and shallow stream.

Arecife, á-rá-see'fá (i.e., the "reef"), a seaport town of the Canaries, on the SE. coast of Lanzarote.

Ared, á-red, or Arid, sometimes designates a mountain-group or highland in the eastern part of Nejd, Arabia, but more frequently it is used to designate a province in Nejd, containing Riad, the capital of that country. It has much fertile soil.

Aredale, a post-hamlet of Butler co., Iowa.

Arelas, Arelate, or Arelatum. See ARELIS.

Arena, á-rá-ná, a town of Italy, province of Pavia, 18 miles by rail NE. of Voghera. Pop. 1500 (commune, 3500).

Arena, a post-village of Delaware co., N.Y., 3 miles SW. of Margaretville, its banking point. Pop. 150.

Arena, a post-village of Paulding co., Ohio. Pop. about 100.

Arena, a banking post-village of Iowa co., Wis., in Arena township (town), 1 mile S. of the Wisconsin River, and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 29 miles W. of Madison. Pop. about 275; of the town in 1900, 1363.

Arenac, a county in the E. part of Michigan, bordering on Lake Huron and Saginaw Bay. Area, 365 sq. m. It is drained by the Rifle River. Capital, Standish. Pop. in 1890, 5683; in 1900, 9821.

Arenac, a post-village of Arenac co., Mich., on Saginaw Bay, 28 miles N. of Bay City.

Arenal, á-rá-nál, a lake-port of Venezuela, in the state of Miranda.

Arenas de San Pedro, á-rá-nás dá sán pá'dro, a village of Spain, in Old Castile, 36 miles SW. of Ávila.

Arenberg-Meppen, á-ren-béne' mép'pen, a former duchy, situated between Oldenburg and the Netherlands, now a part of the Prussian province of Hanover.

Ar'endahl, a post-hamlet of Fillmore co., Minn., about 22 miles SW. of Winona.

Arendal, á-ren-dál, a seaport town of Norway, 36 miles NE. of Christiansand, on the Skagerrak, at the mouth of the Nid-Elv. It is built on islands and rocks projecting into the commodious haven formed within the islands of Tromø and Hiserø. It is a busy trading and ship-building port. Near it are iron-mines. Pop. in 1900, 11,130.

Arendomck, á-ren-donk', a town of Belgium, 29 miles NE. of Antwerp. Pop. (commune) about 4000.

Arendsee, á-rent-sá, a town of Prussian Saxony, 53 miles N. of Magdeburg, on a lake. Pop. 2000.

Arendtsville, á-rent-svil, a post-borough of Adams co., Pa., 74 miles NE. of Gettysburg. Pop. in 1900, 393.

Arenig, a mountain of Merionethshire, Wales, 54 miles W. of Bala. Altitude, 2800 feet.

Arensburg, á-rens-bóssne', a town of Russia, in Livonia, on the S. coast of the island of Ösel, in the Gulf of Riga. It has an active commerce and is a noted seaside resort. Pop. in 1897, 4621.

Arenys de Mar, á-rá-nees' dá mar, a seaport town of Spain, on the Mediterranean, in Catalonia, 25 miles NE. of Barcelona. Pop. of the commune, 4600.

Arenys de Munt, á-rá-nees' dá moont, a village of Spain, a little N. of Arenys de Mar. It has warm springs.

Arenzano, á-rén-sá'no, a village of Italy, 15 miles by rail W. of Genoa. Pop. about 2000 (commune, 4000).

Ar'enzville, a banking post-village of Cass co., Ill., on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R., 80 miles N. of Alton. Pop. in 1900, 462.

Arequipa, á-rá-keepá, a department of Peru, extending along the Pacific between about lat. 14° 30' and 18° 30'

S. and lon. 71° and 75° W., having on the E. the department of Puno, and on the S. Moquegua. Area, 27,744 sq. m. Pop. in 1896, 229,000.

Arequipa, a city of Peru, capital of the department of the same name, 420 miles SE. of Lima, and about 50 miles from the shores of the Pacific. Lat. 16° 24' S. Railways connect it with Mollendo, its port, and Puno, on Lake Titicaca. The city is a bishop's see. It is finely situated, 7640 feet above the sea-level, on the plain of Quilca, on the river Chile, which is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge. The volcano of Misti, on which was until recently posted the loftiest meteorological observatory in the world, rises immediately above it. Arequipa enjoys a delightful climate, and is one of the best-built towns of South America. It has an ornamented square, a cathedral, university, medical school, nunneries, convents, etc. The houses and public edifices are all of stone, with thick walls and vaulted roofs, to resist the shocks of earthquakes, which are so destructive as to have laid the city in ruins on different occasions. The earthquake of Aug. 13-15, 1868, was particularly destructive. There are manufactures of woollen and cotton stuffs and gold and silver tissue, with an active and flourishing trade. In the vicinity are gold- and silver-mines, and the land around the town is fertile and well cultivated. Arequipa was founded by Pizarro as the Villa Hermosa. The Arequipa-Puno railway is one of the most remarkable road constructions in the world, reaching a summit-level of 14,460 feet. Pop. in 1901, about 35,000.

Arequipa, a mountain of Peru. See Misti.

Ares, á-rés, a seaport of Spain, 9 miles NE. of Corunna, with ruins of extensive fortifications. Pop. (commune) 4000.

Ar'ethu'sa, a celebrated fountain of Sicily, in the city of Syracuse. It is close to the shore of the sea, a short distance to the S. of the cathedral square. The water, described by the ancient writers as pure and sweet, is now salt from the sea having found access to it.

Arette, á-rét', a village of France, department of Basses-Pyrénées, 11 miles from Oloron.

Arévalo, á-rá-vá-lo, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 28 miles N. of Ávila. Pop. (commune) 3500.

Arezzo, á-rét'so (anc. Arretium), a city of Italy, in Tuscany, capital of the province of Arezzo, on the Chiana, an affluent of the Arno, 55 miles SE. of Florence. Pop., inclusive of the suburbs in 1901, 16,886. It abounds in architectural remains of the Middle Ages. The chief edifices are the cathedral and several other churches rich in works of art, and the famous loggie of Vasari, in the principal square. The town possesses a museum of prehistoric, Etruscan, and Roman antiquities. Its principal manufactures are silks and woollen stuffs. Arretium was one of the ancient Etruscan cities, and was famous for its manufactures of terra-cotta and fine red pottery. In the Middle Ages Arezzo was one of the most flourishing of the Italian city states. Among the eminent men who were born here are Guido Aretno, Petrarch, Vasari, and Pietro Aretino.

Arezzo, a province of Italy, in Tuscany. It is traversed by the Apennines. Area, 1276 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 275,588. Capital, Arezzo.

Arfak Mountains, in Dutch New Guinea, in the region of Geelvink Bay. They are thought to rise to 10,000 feet.

Arga, an-gá, a river of Spain, in Navarre, rising in the Pyrenees, falls into the Aragon after a course of 60 miles.

Argæus, ar-jee'us (Turk. Arjish-Dagh, ar-jeech' dâe, or Erjish-Dagh, er-jeech' dâe), the loftiest mountain and an extinct volcano of Asia Minor, 12 miles S. of Kaisariyeh. Height, 13,300 feet. It is isolated, except on the SE. side, where it is connected with a branch of the Taurus, and its flanks are studded with volcanic cones. It has two summit craters. The snow-line is 10,700 feet high.

Argamasilla de Alba, an-gá-má-seel'yá dá ál'bá, a town of Spain, in New Castile, 84 miles by rail SSE. of Madrid, on the Guadiana. Pop. of commune, about 3500.

Argentine, ar-jén-tine, a banking city of Wyandotte co., Kan., on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé R., 4 miles W. of Kansas City, Mo. It has manufactures of iron products, railroad repair-shops, and extensive gold and silver smelting-works. Pop. in 1900, 5878.

Argentine, a post-village of Genesee co., Mich., 18 miles SW. of Flint. Pop. about 75.

Argentine Pass, Colo., a depression of the main or Front Range of the Rocky Mountains. Lat. 39° 37' N.; lon. 105° 46' W. Elevation, 13,286 feet.

Argentine (ar-jén-tine) Republic (Sp. República Argentina, rá-poob'le-ká an-nén-tee-ná), the largest and most populous of the Spanish-American states of South America. It is bounded on the N. by Bolivia, on the E.

by Paraguay, Brasil, Uruguay, and the Atlantic, on the S. by the Atlantic and Chile, and on the W. by Chile, from which it is separated by the Andes. The precise boundary with Chile is still in a few positions a matter of dispute between the two countries. The Uruguay River forms most of the boundary with Brasil and Uruguay. The republic extends from about lat. 22° to 55° S., a distance of 2300 miles, and is mostly included between 53° and 70° W. lon. The area is approximately 1,200,000 sq. m. (officially, in 1898, 1,113,850), about equal to one-third of the whole of Europe. Nearly all the Atlantic versant of Patagonia belongs to this country, together with Staten Land and a part of Fuegia. The Argentine Republic is almost wholly in the temperate zone.

Relief of the Land.—The dominant features of the Argentine Republic are the Western Cordilleras, whose linear extent is about 2300 miles; the central and southern highlands—the upland pampas—rising to 3000 feet or more; the lower plains or pampas, which fall off to sea-level; and the plains and plateaus of Patagonia. (See PATAGONIA.) The Pampean region represents in greater part a recently elevated sea-bottom, and at a still later period an area of vast lacustrine waters, whose fine sediments, together with those of the receding oceanic waters (Pampean Sea), now cover the greater part of the country, giving to it its great fertility and insuring that vast pasturage which has made horse- and cattle-breeding so extensive an industry. In the uniform materials of this soil a stone is sometimes not to be found for hundreds of miles, a condition similar to that of the valley of the Amazon and of the great central plain of Hungary. The pampas, in their wealth of flowers and billowy grasses and usually treeless character, have been properly compared with the prairies of North America, and, like them, convey to the mind the feeling of lonely but sublime grandeur. The term "Argentine Mesopotamia" has been applied to a fertile tract of lowland which lies between the Paraná and Uruguay Rivers. Northward the pampas merge into the vast grass and forest plain known as the Gran Chaco, which also occupies part of Bolivia and Paraguay.

The main mountains of the Argentine Republic are the Andes, or Cordilleras, already referred to. On or about the Chilean boundary are some of the giants of the continent: Aconcagua (23,080 feet), the monarch of all Americas; Tupungato, 22,000 ft.; Incaguasi, 21,400 ft.; Veladero, 21,000 ft. The famous Cumbre Pass, or Pass of Uspallata, over which a railroad is now being constructed, crosses the Andes immediately S. of Aconcagua. (See ANDES.) The relief of the northwestern part of the republic is complicated by numerous lofty spurs or offshoots of the Andes, bearing elevations but little inferior to those of the main stem. Such are the Famantina and Aconquija ranges, with the superb Nevado de Famantina (20,700 ft.) and the Aconquija peak (17,740 ft.). The Sierra de Córdoba (7700 ft.) occupies a nearly central position in the republic, breaking up the relief of what is commonly assumed to be the vast and monotonous central plain.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal northern rivers are the Paraná, Paraguay, Uruguay, Pilcomayo, and Vermejo, all of which discharge their waters into the Atlantic through a common outlet called the Rio de la Plata, which is a wide estuary rather than a river. At its mouth, between Cape San Antonio and Cape Santa Maria, it is 170 miles wide. Above Montevideo the navigable channel is contracted between sand-banks, and the water on its southern shore is so shallow that extensive harbor-improvements have been required in order to enable large ships to approach Buenos Aires. The main branches of the Plata are the Paraná and the Uruguay. The former runs nearly southward after it enters this republic from Brasil. Its total length is upward of 2000 miles, a large part of which, inclusive of the Paraguay, is navigable for steamboats of fairly large size. The largest affluents of the Paraná are the Paraguay and Salado. The lower Pilcomayo River forms part of the boundary between Paraguay and the Argentine Republic by a treaty concluded in Feb., 1876. The great plains or pampas are not traversed by any permanent rivers except the Rio Colorado, which runs southward and enters the Atlantic after a course of some 500 miles. Marshes, lagoons, and temporary lakes are numerous in the central and southern plains. Many of these disappear in the dry season, leaving the ground covered with saline deposits. The more important southern rivers are the Rio Negro, Chubut, Chio, Santa Cruz, and Gallegos.

Climate.—The climate is generally healthy. The elevated plains of Mendoza enjoy an agreeable and temperate climate, and the wide region between Mendoza and Buenos Aires has one of the finest climates in the world. The mean annual temperature at Buenos Aires is about 64°, with a maximum of 100°. Extremes of heat are encountered in the northern and north-central parts, as at Catamarca, Santiago, Tucumán, and Córdoba, where the mercury frequently rises to 105°–113°. The central and southern plains are subject to long droughts, but in the more favored regions the rainfall is from 30 to 40 inches or more. In some parts of Fuegia it is said to be nearly or quite 120 inches. The pampero, a violent wind blowing from the SW. in the dry season, raises clouds of dust that darken the air. Patagonia has in general a cool and healthy climate. Even in Fuegia the climate, though harsh and disagreeable, is never very cold. The mean annual temperature at Ushwiya, in lat. 54° 53' S., is 42°.

Mineral Resources.—Gold, silver, copper, iron, and tin are found in many parts, particularly in the mountains of the NW. and in the Aconquija Range, in the regions of Tucumán, Catamarca, Jujuy, and Córdoba. The richest or most developed mines are those of La Rioja. Rich deposits of gold also occur in the southern territories, especially in Fuegia. Among the other minerals are coal, alum, sulphur, and salt.

Plants and Animals.—The flora of the pampas is not remarkable for variety. Indeed, over large areas it is distinguished by a uniform sameness, and it has been described as being the poorest in species of any fertile district of the globe. One of its ornaments is the "pampas grass" (Gyncrium argenteum). Characteristic plants of the Gran Chaco are thorny mimosas, the algarroba (Prosopis), and the wax-palm (Copernicia cerifera), which, with other palms and tropical plants, make magnificent forests, as luxuriant in some parts as almost any forest of South America. In the region of the salt plains of the Upper Colorado there are extensive growths of the giant candelabra cactus, which for size is rivalled only by those of the mountains of Mexico. The provinces of Córdoba, Santiago, and Tucumán are covered with forests of magnificent trees of excellent timber. The southern territories are well wooded, and immense forests of beech cover the mountains of Fuegia, especially along the borders of the Strait of Magellan. The maté, or Paraguay tea, is indigenous northward.

The principal indigenous animals are the jaguar, puma or cougar, fox, deer, tapir, capybara, guanaco, chinchilla, viscacha, ant-eater, and armadillo; and among birds the rheas, or South American ostrich, and condor. The immense herds of cattle and horses that roam over the pampas are of European breeds.

Agriculture, Commerce, etc.—A leading source of wealth consists in the rearing of cattle, horses, and sheep. There were in the country in 1895, 21,701,526 cattle, 4,446,859 horses, 483,369 mules, 74,379,562 sheep, and 652,766 hogs. Agriculture has made excellent progress. Large and increasing quantities of cotton, sugar-cane, tobacco, wheat, barley, oats, maize, and rice are raised. Grapes, apples, and peaches are cultivated. There are manufactures of flour, spirits and malted liquors, phosphorus, blankets, cloths, woollens (mantles, ponchos), embroideries and laces, leather, etc., and large establishments for the handling of various cattle-products and the packing of meat. The chief articles of export are hides, tallow, wool, feathers, horns, beef, bones, live-stock, grain, and various metals and metallic ores. The value of the exports of animals and animal products in 1902 was $104,639,139; of agricultural products, $68,171,332; forest products, $3,649,208; and minerals, $327,006.

Population and Government.—The bulk of the Argentines represent a mixture of Spanish, Indian, and negro blood. Their language is Spanish. The pure Spanish element in the population is overshadowed by the non-Spanish European element introduced in recent times. The Indian population is no longer numerous. An interesting class is that of the Gauchos, who live on horseback and are employed in taming wild horses and in catching and slaughtering cattle. The Gran Chaco and Patagonia are infested by several tribes of Indians of wandering habits. Numbers of French, Italian, and other European immigrants have settled in this republic, and latterly it has received large accessions from the Jewish population of Russia, following upon the anti-Semitic enactments of that empire. The Catholic religion predominates here, but other religions are tolerated. A portion of the aborigines have been Christianised.

The government is a federal republic, administered by a president, who is elected for a term of 6 years. There are two legislative bodies, the senate and the chamber of deputies, or house of representatives. The senate is composed of 30 members, 2 from each of the provinces and 2 from the capital city. Senators are elected for 9 years, and the members of the lower house for 4 years. Buenos Aires is the capital of the republic, which is divided into 14 provinces,—namely, Buenos Aires, Catamarca, Córdoba, Corrientes, Entre Rios, Jujuy, La Rioja, Mendoza, Salta, San Juan, San Luis, Santa Fé, Santiago, and Tucumán; besides which there are the national territories of Pampa, Neuquén, Rio Negro, Chubut, Santa Cruz, Fuegia (and Los Andes), Misiones, Formosa, and Chaco. The provinces correspond to the states of the North American Union, and the constitution of the republic is formed on the model of that of the United States. The principal towns are Buenos Aires (with a population, in 1900, of 806,613), Rosario (95,000), Córdoba (47,609), La Plata, Tucumán, Mendoza, Santa Fé, Paraná, and Corrientes. Chubut is an interesting Welsh colony in Patagonia. The population of the republic in Dec., 1900, was 4,794,149, of which number upward of 1,000,000 were of foreign birth. The government gives great attention to popular education, and public schools of various grades are maintained in great numbers. There are universities at Buenos Aires, La Plata, Córdoba, Santa Fé, and Paraná, and at Córdoba and La Plata there are well-equipped astronomical observatories. There are fine museums of natural history at Buenos Aires and La Plata. The length of railways in operation in 1901 was 10,300 miles.

History.—The Portuguese and Spanish navigators reached the mouth of the Plata as early as the second decade of the sixteenth century. In 1527–28, Sebastian Cabot, in the service of the King of Spain, entered the estuary and ascended the Paraná. Don Pedro de Mendoza built a fort on the site of Buenos Aires in 1535 and explored the interior. Soon after this date the Spaniards founded several towns and began the conquest of the country. For two centuries these Spanish colonies were governed by the viceroy of Peru. In 1776 the viceroyalty of Buenos Aires was created, including a vast area outside of the present Argentine Republic. Revolutionary movements commenced here, as in other American colonies of Spain, in 1810. The people were involved in civil wars, some fighting for the king and others for independence. The deputies of several provinces met in 1816 at Tucumán, renounced their allegiance to the king of Spain, and founded a republic under the name of the United Provinces of the Río de la Plata. After that the country was for some time disturbed by revolutions and civil wars. Two parties, Federalists and Unitarios, contended for mastery. General Rosas was for a time the leader of the Federalists, who opposed a strong central government and desired a federation of states which should be nearly independent. Rosas exercised a tyrannical dictatorship from 1835 to 1852, when he was overthrown by Urquiza and his Brazilian allies. The fall of Rosas was followed by the secession of the provinces of Buenos Aires and another civil war. A permanent reunion was not effected until 1862. Between 1865 and 1870 the allied powers of the Argentine Republic, Brasil, and Uruguay waged war against Paraguay. The dispute with Chile regarding the Patagonian territories was settled in 1881.

Argentino, an-jén-tee'no, a lake of the Argentine Republic, is the source of the Santa Cruz River. Lat. 50° 14' S.

Argenton, an-shōn'tōn' (anc. Argentomagus), a town of France, department of Indre, on the Creuse, 20 miles by rail SW. of Châteauroux. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 6281. It has manufactures of woollen yarn, cloth, etc.

Perth and Dumbarton, and on the W. and S. the Atlantic and North Channel. It includes the islands of Mull, Islay, Jura, Tiree, Coll, Iona or Icolmkill, Staffa, etc. Area, 3213 sq. m., of which nearly a half belongs to the islands. Pop. in 1901, 73,760. Surface mostly rugged and mountainous. Loch Awe is in this county. Great numbers of cattle are reared here for export to southern markets. Chief towns are Inverary (the capital), Campbelltown, and Oban. The county, as such, returns 1 member to the House of Commons. Argyll gives the title of duke to the head of the Campbell family.

Argyro-Castro, an'gho-ro kás'tro (mod. Gr. Argyrokastro; Turk. Ergri Kastri), a town of Albania, vilayet of Janina, on a tributary of the Viosa, 47 miles NW. of Janina. Pop. about 20,000 (?). It is picturesquely situated and has many mosques. It is celebrated for its snuff.

Arheilgen, a village of Hesse, Germany, in the circle of Darmstadt. Pop. in 1900, 4468.

Ar'i, a post-station of Allen co., Ind.

Aris, the ancient name of a region now included in NW. Afghanistan and the Persian province of Khorassan.

Arisano di Puglia, á-re-á'no dee pool'yá, a town of Italy, province of Avellino, on a rocky eminence of the Apennines, 17 miles by rail E. of Benevento. Pop. in 1901, 8366; of the commune, 17,656. It has a cathedral.

Aria Palus, the ancient name of HAMUS.

Arica, á-re-á'há, a maritime town of Chile, in the province of Tacna, about 35 miles S. of Tacna, with which it is connected by rail. Lat. 18° 28' S.; lon. 70° 20' W. It was formerly a much more important place than now. It has manufactures of glass beads, exports copper-ore and silver, and is the principal port through which the foreign commerce is carried on with Bolivia. The region about Arica was visited by a severe earthquake in 1868. Pop. of the town, once estimated at 30,000, is about 3000.

Ariccia, á-rich'á, a town of Italy, in the province of Rome, 1½ miles from Albano. It has a stately park. Pop. of the commune in 1901, 9945.

Aricbat, á-re-shát', a seaport of Nova Scotia, on Arichat Island or Isle Madame (Cape Breton). Lat. 45° 28' N.; lon. 61° 3' W. It has important fishery establishments and is the chief town of the co. of Richmond. It is the see of a Catholic bishop. It has a good harbor. A lead-mine has been worked at the head of the harbor. Pop. about 2000.

Ariège, á-re-áish', a river of France, rises in the eastern Pyrenees, traverses the departments of Ariège and Haute-Garonne, and joins the Garonne. Length, 90 miles.

Ariège, a department in the S. of France, having S. Catalonia and Andorra; W., Haute-Garonne; NE., Aude; and SE., Pyrénées-Orientales. Area, 1890 sq. m. The Pyrenees rise like a great wall on the Spanish border, and their offshoots cover a large portion of the department. The principal summits are the Pic d'Estax, 10,302 feet, and Montcaim, 10,162 feet, both rising into perpetual snow. The various branches, stretching from E. to W., separate the department into two valleys, the one watered by the Ariège and the other by the Salat. In the N. the climate is mild and temperate; but in the S. the heat is oppressive in summer and the cold extreme in winter. The higher lands in the S. furnish wood and pasturage; the lower are remarkable for their fertility. The vine is cultivated up to the middle of the higher mountains. Large numbers of cattle, sheep, and goats are reared. There are rich mines of iron, the working of which metal is an important industry. Marble, gneiss, slates, and coal are worked. Capital, Foix. Pop. in 1891, 237,491; in 1901, 210,527.

Ariel, á-re-él, a post-village of Lafourche parish, La., 46 miles (direct) SW. of New Orleans. Pop. about 125.

Ariel, a post-village of Wayne co., Pa., 15 miles W. of Hawley. Pop. about 300.

Aricelli, á-re-á'lee, a town of Italy, province and 9 miles SE. of Chieti. Pop. about 1000.

Arienzo, á-re-á'n'zo, a town of Italy, province of Caserta, 18 miles NE. of Naples. Pop. 3000.

Ariet'ta, a post-township (town) of Hamilton co., N.Y., in the northern wilderness. It contains Lake Piseco, a resort for anglers and tourists. Pop. in 1900, 247.

Arigal, á-re-gál, a mountain of Ireland, in Ulster, co. of Donegal, 7½ miles E. of Glenties Bay. Height, 2462 feet.

Ariguanabo, á-re-gwá-ná'bo, a lake of Havana province, Cuba, 20 miles SW. of Havana city, in the central chain of high hills. It is about 6 sq. m. in area, and is drained by the San Antonio River.

Arima, a fashionable resort of Japan, near Kobe.

Arimao, Rio, re-o á-re-má'o, or San Juan, a river of Cuba, rises in Santa Clara province and empties on the S. coast 3 miles E. of Cienfuegos Bay.

Ariminum, the ancient name of RIMINI.

Arimos, á-re-á'nosh, a name given to the upper waters of the river Tapajós, Brasil, S. of lat. 10° S. The stream rises in the Sierra Marzáo of Matto Grosso.

Arinthod, á-rán'to', a town of France, department of Jura, 19 miles S. of Lons-le-Saulnier. Pop. 700.

Ario, or Ario de Rosales, a town of Mexico, in the state of Michoacán, about 48 miles SW. of Morelia.

Arion, a post-town of Crawford co., Iowa, on the Illinois Central R., 3 miles NE. of Dow City. Pop. in 1900, 192.

Arion, a post-hamlet of Scioto co., Ohio, 12 miles N. of Portsmouth.

Arios'to, a post-hamlet of Dale co., Ala., 5 miles N. of Ozark.

Aripo, á-re-á'po, or Arip'po, a village of Ceylon, on its W. coast, 35 miles NNE. of Calpentyne. It is noted for its pearl-fisheries.

Arisaig, á-rí-sék', a post-village of Antigonish co., Nova Scotia, on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, 32½ miles NE. of New Glasgow.

Arish, El, a village of Egypt. See EL-ARISH.

Arispe, á-ris'pá, a town of Mexico, state of Sonora, on the Sonora River, in the Sierra Madre, and about 100 miles N. by E. of Hermosillo. Pop. about 2000. There are extensive ruins NW. of the town, and numerous mines in its vicinity.

Aris'pe, a post-village of Union co., Iowa, about 60 miles by rail S. of Des Moines. Pop. 125.

Aris'pie, a post-station of Pottawatomie co., Kan.

Aristes, a post-village of Columbia co., Pa. Pop. about 500. The banking point is Ashland.

Aristiza'ble Island, British Columbia, lies in Queen Charlotte Sound, is 27 miles long, and is separated by Laredo Channel from Princess Royal Island.

Aritzo, a village of Sardinia, 40 miles N. of Cagliari.

Arivaca, a post-village of Pima co., Ariz. Pop. about 200.

Ariza, á-re-á'thá, a town of Spain, 70 miles SW. of Saragossa. Pop. (commune) 1700.

Arize, á-re-á', or Larize, lá-re-á', a river of France, after a course of about 25 miles falls into the Garonne opposite Carbone. It traverses Roche-du-Mas, a remarkable cavern of the Pyrenees.

Arizo'na, a territory of the United States, bordering on Mexico, is bounded N. by Utah and Nevada, E. by New Mexico, S. by Mexico, and W. by California and Nevada. The 37th degree of N. lat. is its northern, and the 109th degree of W. lon. its eastern limit, and nearly all the W. border is washed by the navigable Colorado River. Area, 112,920 sq. m.

Arizona is essentially a vast table-land or series of plateaus (mesas), whose general elevation rises to 5000-8000 feet, and probably more than one-half of the area occupies a position 5000 feet above sea-level. The step-like succession of the different plateau surfaces has differentiated distinct plateau areas, to which local, and more recently geological, names have been given. Of such are the Uinkaret, Sheavwits, Kanab, and Kaibab plateaus. The territory is entirely within the basin of the Colorado, two of whose principal tributaries, the Gila and the Little Colorado, traverse it from E. to W. Many of the streams of the territory flow to a greater or less extent in deeply eroded chasms or cañons, the most remarkable of which, constituting one of the most stupendous features of the earth's surface, is the Grand Cañon of the Colorado, whose walls for more than 300 miles rise precipitously from 3000 to 5000 feet above the water's edge. The passage of even the smallest boats along this gloomy course can be effected only with extreme peril, owing to the frequency of rocks and rapids. (See GRAND CAÑON OF THE COLORADO.) The rainfall of Arizona is small, ordinarily from 14 to 21 inches, and occurs chiefly during July, August, and September. The streams are mainly useful as sources of supply for irrigation and mining. Where irrigation can be effected, the soil usually proves richly productive, even on alkaline plains which were apparently worthless desert; while vast tracts of waste and mountain land have proved to be admirably adapted to wool-growing and cattle-raising, notwithstanding the fact that vegetation is for the most part scanty. Most of the mountain-chains may be regarded as spurs stretching irregularly across high and broken plateaus which slope W. and S. from the Rocky Mountains; but there are many isolated and detached mountain-groups, as the Mogollon (8000 feet) and Pinal Mountains, etc. The San Francisco Mountains, a group of volcanic summits lying to the NW. of Flagstaff, are the loftiest elevations of the territory, 12,794 feet. In the mountains of the NE. there are forests of coniferous trees, covering an area of perhaps 3000 sq. m. Elsewhere the mesquite, cottonwood, various species of cactus (including the giant candelabra cactus, one of the most physiognomic types of vegetation), grease-wood, creosote-bush or stinkweed, agave, yucca, and the so-called sage-bush are characteristic plants. Among the remarkable shrubs and trees are the Pouquiera splendens, the palo de hierro, New Mexican locust, green-bark, or palo verde, Jerusalem thorn, a peculiar species of plane-tree, and numerous others quite unknown on the Atlantic slope. There are extensive remains of forest occurring in the form of prostrate silicified tree-trunks, some of which measure as much as 60-80 feet in length. The "Chalcedony or Petrified Forest of Arizona," situated in the eastern part of the territory, and visited from Adamana or Holbrook, is a national curiosity.

Geology and Minerals.—The cañons of Arizona afford unsurpassed facilities for the study of a vast thickness of the earth's crust, and reveal a full section extending downward from the Carboniferous series to the granitic rocks of Archean age. Immense lava-beds, with numerous large and small cones, and having in part the appearance of the Phlegrean Fields of Southern Italy, exist particularly in the N., but at present there are no active volcanoes. The great wealth of the territory consists in its mineral treasures. Gold, silver, lead, copper, iron, sulphur, coal, cinabar, salt, borax, and other valuable mineral substances abound. The mining and working of gold- and silver-ores are thus far the leading industrial pursuits. The mines were wrought for many years by Mexican and Spanish proprietors; but the scanty water-supply and the difficulties of transportation, both in those days and more recently, very greatly interfered with the productiveness of many of the mines. The lately increased railroad facilities have, however, given a new impetus to the development of the vast mineral resources, and the crushing, milling, and the amalgamation of ores figure now as one of the leading industries. The value of the gold product in 1903 was $2,729,824; and of silver, $1,126,661. The copper product in 1899 was 133,054,860 pounds, and in 1903 147,648,271 pounds, being in quantity immediately after that mined in the Lake Superior region and in Montana. Coal is found in several parts of the territory, and petroleum has been reported from near Phoenix, Prescott, and Jerome. The more important ore-counties are Yavapai, Yuma, Mohave, Cochise, Graham, Pinal, and Gila. Almost the entire manufacturing of the territory, excepting the smelting and refining of ores, which constitute about 80 per cent. of the total product, is limited to neighborhood industries.

Climate and Agriculture.—On account of the scanty rainfall, there is a general absence of those catarrhal diseases which result from an overplus of moisture in air and soil. The mountain-regions have a delightfully cool climate. Snow is nowhere perpetual, and is rare except upon mountain-peaks in winter. In the SW. the summer heat is excessive, and malarial fevers are not unknown upon the bottom-lands of the Lower Colorado. These lowlands, with similar tracts along the Gila and Salt Rivers, constitute perhaps the best agricultural sections of the territory.

The country is by nature better adapted to pastoral than to agricultural pursuits, and the raising of cattle and sheep has been stimulated by the extension of agriculture in California. Much attention has been devoted lately to irrigation, and excellent crops of alfalfa, wheat, barley, corn, fruits, and garden vegetables are raised. The Pueblo Indians and other half-civilized tribes have been for an unknown period successfully engaged in agriculture; and the remains of many ancient aqueducts, now dry, show that at a former period irrigation was extensively practised. The number of acres capable of profitable irrigation is estimated at from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000.

Counties and Towns.—There are 13 counties: Apache, Cochise, Coconino, Gila, Graham, Maricopa, Mohave, Navajo, Pima, Pinal, Santa Cruz, Yavapai, and Yuma. The chief towns are Tucson (pop. in 1900, 7531), Yuma (opposite Fort Yuma, Cal., on the Colorado River), Prescott (pop. 3559), Phoenix, the capital (pop. 5544), Tombstone, Florence, and Bisbee.

Education, etc.—There are territorial normal schools at Tempe and Flagstaff and a school of mines at Tucson. The University of Arizona at Tucson was opened in 1891. In connection with the agricultural department of this institution there are experimental stations at the university, at Phoenix, at Tempe, and near Yuma. The Lowell Observatory is at Flagstaff. The commercial facilities of Arizona have been greatly increased by the construction of the Southern Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific Rr. In 1890 the length of operating roads was 1465 miles.

Population.—Exclusive of untaxed Indians, the population of this region was in 1860, 6482; in 1870, 9658; in 1880, 40,440; and in 1890, 69,620. In 1900 the population was 122,931, of whom 24,233 were foreigners. The number includes 1848 negroes, 1419 Chinese, 281 Japanese, and 1836 taxed Indians. The untaxed Indians were 24,644. Of the wild tribes, the Apaches were for a long time the terror of this whole region, but since the surrender of Geronimo in 1886 they have given little trouble. Arizona sends one territorial delegate to the national congress.

History.—Spanish missions were established in this region probably about 1580, and long before the advent of the whites there were, as at present, Indian communities which had attained a respectable degree of civilization. Very remarkable ruins of this prehistoric period exist in the territory. These ancient houses, like the casas grandes of some of the present half-civilized tribes of Arizona and New Mexico, were simply great tenement-houses of several stories, each containing in some instances hundreds and even thousands of inhabitants. These great structures were built of stone or sun-dried brick, and served for defence against hostile tribes as well as for habitations. Some degree of communism was probably observed. The cliff-dwellings and cave-dwellings in and about the Walnut Cañon and near Phoenix are easily accessible points to the tourist. In 1848 all this region N. of the Gila, then included in New Mexico, was ceded to the United States. In 1853 the Gadsden Purchase, covering a considerable territory S. of the Gila, was made from Mexico. Of this the greater part now belongs to Arizona. The region was long desolated by the ravages of Indians, and was the abode of many outlawed whites, chiefly Mexican. In 1863 it was organized as a territory.

Arizona City, Ariz., the former name of YUMA. Arizonia, or Arizona, a post-village of Claiborne parish, La., about 60 miles ENE. of Shreveport.

Arjeplog, ar'yē-plōg', a small town of Sweden, in Norrbotten, on the Horn-Ärvas, 175 miles NW. of Umeå.

Arjish, ar'jēesh', a river of Rumania, rises in the Carpathian Mountains and joins the Danube 42 miles SSE. of Bucharest. Length, 150 miles.

Arjsh (Ruman, Curtea de Argeș), a town of Rumania, on the Arjsh, 90 miles NW. of Bucharest. Pop. 4000. It is the ancient Ardisceus. The place figures in the early history of Wallachia as the princely residence. One of the churches is a notable edifice.

Arjish, a small town of Turkish Armenia, on the N. shore of Lake Van.

Arjish, or Arjish-Dagh. See ARGUS.

Arjona, ar-mō'nā, a town of Spain, Andalusia, 15 miles NW. of Jaén. It has manufactures of pottery. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 7041.

Arjonilla, ar-ro-neel'yā, a market-town of Spain, 5 miles NW. of Arjona. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 4350.

Ark'abut'ia, a post-town of Tate co., Miss., 10 miles W. of Coldwater. Pop. in 1900, 265.

Arkadel'phia, a post-village of Blount co., Ala., 10 miles W. of Blount Springs. Pop. about 150.

Arkadelphia, a banking city, capital of Clark co., Ark., on the Ouachita River and on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern R., 65 miles SW. of Little Rock. It has cotton- and saw-mills, foundries and machine-shops, etc. The Ouachita Baptist College and the Arkadelphia Methodist College are located here. Pop. in 1900, 2739.

Arkadia, Greece. See ARCADIA; also KYPARISIA.

Ark'alon, a post-hamlet of Seward co., Kan., on the Cimarron River and on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 164 miles SW. of Hutchinson.

Arkans'as (officially pronounced ar'kan-saw'), a large river of the United States, is an affluent of the Mississippi. It rises near Mount Arkansas, in Colorado, about lat. 39° 20' N. and lon. 106° 15' W. It runs at first southward and southeastward and passes through a deep cañon, the eastern portion of which, about 9 miles in length, is known as the Royal Gorge, to the E. side of the Front Range. After reaching Pueblo its general direction is eastward for about 300 miles. It descends 2400 feet in a distance of 200 miles, from the mouth of the Apishpa River to the Pawnee. It traverses the great treeless plains of Colorado and western Kansas, and near the middle of the latter state changes its course to the southeast. Having crossed the southern boundary of Kansas it runs southeastward through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, receiving large affluents named Little Arkansas, Cimarron, and Canadian rivers from the right, and the Neosho River from the left. Pursuing a southeast course it intersects the state of Arkansas, which it divides into nearly equal parts, and enters the Mississippi River at Napoleon, in Desha co. It is not obstructed by falls or rapids after it descends into the plains of western Kansas. The length of this river is about 2000 miles, and the area of the basin it drains is 185,000 miles. Small steamboats can ascend it to Wichita, about 600 miles from its mouth, except during low water.

Arkansas, a south-central state of the American Union, bounded N. by Missouri, E. by the Mississippi River, which separates it from Tennessee and Mississippi, S. by Louisiana and Texas, and W. by Texas and the Indian Territory. Its southern limit is 33° N. lat., and its northern is the parallel of 36° 30'. Area of the land surface, 53,045 sq. m.; of the contained waters, 805 sq. m.

The Face of the Country is quite varied. The Ozark Mountains, a broken range of hills, thought by some geologists to be an isolated or detached swell of the Appalachian system of mountains, and with some peaks of considerable height, extend in a SW. direction from Missouri as far as the Arkansas River. Outlying members of this hill-system are the Black Hills of the N., the Ouachita Hills of the S., and the Cane Hills of the NW. The highest elevations in the state appear to be Fourche and Magazine Mountains, both about 2800 feet; there are a number of other heights of 2000-2500 feet. The state is bisected by the Arkansas River. Other streams of greater or less magnitude, all tributary to the Mississippi system, are the St. Francis in the NE., with a valley that is mainly a swamp, the White, Saline, Ouachita (Washita), Little Missouri, and Red. The great Bayou Bartholomew in the SE. puts a large area of the country under the domination of the Mississippi River. The Mississippi river-bottoms are very extensive and usually level, with many marshes and bayous, overflow being prevented by an extensive and costly system of levees and dikes. Westward from this the land rises gently till the hill-country is reached. In the S. are numerous prairie-tracts, while other regions are beautifully diversified with hills and valleys. Large parts of the state are finely timbered. There are dense pine forests; also an abundance of oak, hickory, pecan, walnut, chiot, bois d'arc, cypress, cedar, and many other useful trees. The lumber trade is very extensive. Abundant and very remarkable remains of a prehistoric period exist in the NE., where dikes, roads, mounds, and relics of old fortifications have been traced.

Minerals.—The mineral wealth of Arkansas is great. Coal is extensively developed in counties lying on both sides of the Arkansas River. The coals are both semi-anthracite and bituminous, the former of marked excellence. The quantity mined in 1903 was valued at $3,360,831. Lignite of fairly good quality exists in the SE. Tertiary region. Besides coal there is abundance of rich argilliferous galea; and excellent ores of zinc, copper, manganese, and iron are known to exist at various points. The valuable novaculite, or hone-stone, is largely obtained. Grindstones, marble, burr millstone, slate, granite, and kaolin are among the plentiful mineral treasures of Arkansas. The valuable mineral bauxite exists in beds of great lateral extent, and in 1903 the product amounted to 25,715 tons, or to more than five times the quantity that was mined in 1899. The famous Hot Springs, with a temperature ranging to 158°, renowned for their efficacy in a wide range of diseases, are in Garland co., and there are other mineral and thermal waters.

Climate.—The climate of the marshy and flat alluvial districts is hot, and people not acclimated are exposed to severe febrile attacks. But the remainder of the state, and especially the hill-region, has a very pleasant and salubrious climate. Neither the severe N. winds of Texas nor the long droughts of Kansas are experienced here. The Ozark region has a high reputation as a sanitary retreat for persons suffering from pulmonary disease. At Washington, in the NW. part of the state, the mean annual temperature is about 61°. The rainfall, corresponding to that of the Gulf region generally, is comparatively high, ranging from about 40 to 55 inches.

Industrial Pursuits.—Agriculture has always been the leading industrial interest, for much of the soil is of unsurpassed fertility. Cotton and corn, produced mainly in the southeastern half of the state, are the most important products, the valley of the Arkansas being one of the best cotton-growing regions of the United States. The cotton-product for the year 1900 was 828,200 commercial bales. The principal agricultural crops were in 1900: corn, 45,225,947 bushels; wheat, 2,689,418 bushels; oats, 7,038,665 bushels; potatoes, 2,127,816 bushels; and hay, 228,580 tons. Fruit culture has developed into an important industry, especially in the NW. section of the state, where the apple, peach, and strawberry are grown in great quantity. The raising of live-stock is also an important pursuit. Manufacturing is hardly as yet conducted on a large scale, but there are manufactures of cotton and woollen goods, leather, lumber, etc.; and for enterprises of this class the state affords excellent facilities. The leading industry is the manufacture of timber- and lumber-products, the valuation of which in 1900 was $23,959,983. The manufacture of cotton-seed oil and cake ranked third. The commerce of the state is much facilitated by the navigable rivers. These are, besides the Mississippi, the Arkansas, navigable across the entire state; the Ouachita, navigable two-thirds of the year to Arkadelphia; the Red River, which crosses the SW. angle of the state; the St. Francis, navigable for some 150 miles in high stages of the water; the White River, navigable to Batesville, 300 miles; and the Black River, navigable for 100 miles; besides other rivers and bayous adapted to flat-boat navigation.

Education.—Education has during recent years received considerable attention, and during the year 1899 the enrollment was 296,785 (exclusive of private and denominational schools), of whom 76,040 were colored. There is a State University, at Fayetteville, with a normal department and a training-school. Among other educational institutions are the Arkansas Baptist College and Philander Smith College (for colored) at Little Rock, the Ouachita and the Arkadelphia Methodist Colleges at Arkadelphia, and Arkansas College at Batesville.

Counties and Towns.—Arkansas has 75 counties: Arkansas, Ashley, Baxter, Benton, Boone, Bradley, Calhoun, Carroll, Chicot, Clark, Clay, Cleburne, Cleveland, Columbia, Conway, Craighead, Crawford, Crittenden, Cross, Dallas, Desha, Drew, Faulkner, Franklin, Fulton, Garland, Grant, Greene, Hempstead, Hot Spring, Howard, Independence, Izard, Jackson, Jefferson, Johnson, Lafayette, Lawrence, Lee, Lincoln, Little River, Logan, Lonoke, Madison, Marion, Miller, Mississippi, Monroe, Montgomery, Nevada, Newton, Ouachita, Perry, Phillips, Pike, Poinsett, Polk, Pope, Prairie, Pulaski, Randolph, St. Francis, Saline, Scott, Sevier, Sebastian, Sevier, Sharp, Stone, Union, Van Buren, Washington, White, Woodruff, Yell.

The principal towns are Little Rock, the capital (pop. in 1900, 38,307), Fort Smith (pop. 11,587), Pine Bluff (pop. 11,496), Hot Springs (pop. 9973), and Helena (pop. 5550). Other places of consequence are Texarkana, Fayetteville, Eureka Springs, Camden, and Arkadelphia.

Government.—A governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general are elected for a term of 2 years. The present constitution was adopted in 1874. Arkansas sends 7 representatives to the Federal Congress.

Population.—In 1810 this region, then a part of Louisiana, had 1062 inhabitants, exclusive of Indians. In 1820 the population was 14,255; in 1830, 30,388; in 1840, 97,574 (within the present limits); in 1850, 209,897; in 1860, 435,450; in 1870, 454,471; in 1880, 803,525; in 1890, 1,128,179. The population in 1900 was 1,311,664, of whom 14,289 were of foreign birth. There were in the state 366,856 negroes, 62 Chinese, and 66 Indians.

History.—Arkansas was a part of French Louisiana, which was purchased in 1803 by the United States. It became a portion of Missouri Territory in 1812, and was set off and organized as Arkansas Territory in 1819. The state was admitted to the Union in 1836; it was but slowly developed until 1850, but in the decade following its population was doubled. A state convention in 1861 passed an ordinance of secession, and soon Arkansas became the scene of active military operations. In 1864, the state being held under Federal military sway, an amended constitution was adopted, but it was rejected by Congress. The military rule was not relaxed until 1868, when a new constitution was adopted, and Arkansas was re-admitted to congressional representation. The great extension of railroads (mileage in 1900, 3167) in Arkansas has been followed by a large immigration.

Arkansas, a county in the SE. part of Arkansas, has an area of 1013 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by White River and on the SW. by the Arkansas River, which is navigable by steamboats, and is intersected by Metoe Bayou. Capital, Dewitt. Pop. in 1890, 11,432; in 1900, 12,973.

Arkansas City, a banking post-village, capital of Desha co., Ark., on the Mississippi River and on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern R., 71 miles SE. of Pine Bluff. It is a shipping point for cotton. Pop. in 1900, 1091.

Arkansas City, a banking city of Cowley co., Kan., on the Arkansas River, at the junction of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and other railroads, 14 miles S. of Winfield. It is a distributing point for the military posts, cattle-ranches, and agencies, and has various manufactures. Pop. in 1880, 1012; in 1890, 8347; in 1900, 6140. A national Indian school is located here.

Arkansas, Mount, Colo., is near the source of the Arkansas River, in lat. 39° 22' N., lon. 106° 15' W. It has an altitude of about 13,600 feet above sea-level.

Arles, arls (Fr. pron. arl; anc. Ar'elas, Arēla'te, or Arēla'tum), a city of France, in Provence, department of Bouches-du-Rhône, on the left bank of the Rhone, where it subdivides to form its delta (La Camargue), 15 miles from the Mediterranean and 44 miles NW. of Marseilles. It is one of the oldest towns of southern France. On the principal square is the fine Hôtel de Ville, and in the centre stands a granite obelisk, a relic of the ancient splendor of the place, re-erected in the seventeenth century. Among the buildings of note are the mediæval cathedral and the church of Notre Dame. The principal Roman remains are an amphitheatre which is supposed to have surpassed that of Nîmes in size and magnificence, and which has been converted into a bull-ring, a vast theatre, among whose ruins the Venus of Arles, now in the Louvre, was discovered, and a cemetery unearthed in recent times. Arles has museums, a public library, and a school of hydrography.

Ship-building is carried on, and there are machine- and car-shops, and manufactories of hats, etc. The town is connected with the Mediterranean at Bouc by a ship-canal. Arles is prominent in early ecclesiastical history. A famous synod was held here in 353. The place gave its name to a mediæval kingdom, which comprised a considerable part of what is now SE. France. Armenia, ar-'mē-ne-ə (Turk. Ermen'iyeh; Russ. Arménia), a country of western Asia, occupying a great part of the table-land between the highlands of Asia Minor and the Caspian and between the Caucasus on the NE. and Mesopotamia, on the SW., from prehistoric times the home of the Armenian race, and at different periods the seat of an independent Armenian kingdom. In its widest significance (as formerly understood) it extends from about lat. 37° to 42° N. and from about lon. 37° to 49° E., and embraces the NE. corner of Asiatic Turkey, the southern half of the Russian territory of Transcaucasia, and the NW. corner of Persia (part of the province of Azerbaijan). In this wider sense it was divided in ancient times into Armenia Major, to the E. of the Euphrates, and Armenia Minor, to the W. of that river. In the narrower modern sense (as now more generally understood) Armenia comprises the Turkish vilayets of Erzerum, Van, and Bitlis, and parts of the vilayets of Diarbekir and Mamuret-ül-Aziz, the Russian governments of Erivan and Yelizavetpol, the Russian territory of Kars, and part of the government of Tiflis. Russian Armenia has been wrested in part from Persia (1828) and in part from Turkey (1878). The SE. corner of Armenia, between the middle Aras and Lake Urumiah, has remained in the possession of Persia. Armenia is the mountain-land from which descend the Euphrates, Tigris, Kur, and Aras, the last two flowing eastward towards the Caspian. It is a region of elevated plateaus, from 3000 to 7000 feet above sea-level, enclosed between lofty mountain-ranges, extending mainly E. and W., which are overtopped by huge conical volcanic peaks. The loftiest of these, Mount Ararat, situated where Russia, Turkey, and Persia meet, soars aloft from the plateau of Erivan to a height of 17,090 (or 16,900) ft. above the sea. Ala-Gözü, farther to the N., has an elevation of 14,277 (or 13,461) ft. The plateau of Erzerum (about 6000 ft.), N. of the Murad-Su, the eastern head-stream of the Euphrates, bears the Bingöl-Dagh, about 12,900 ft. The Armenian table-land (inclusive of the corner of old Armenia still belonging to Persia) contains three extensive salt lakes,—Van (5500 ft. elevation) in Turkey, Goktoha (6800 ft.) in Russian territory, and Urumiah (4000 ft.). The volcanic character of the region is attested by the severe earthquakes which visit it. The Armenian highlands are characterized by the meagreness of arboreal vegetation. Much of the region is barren, but where water is plentiful the great heat of the short summer causes the crops to mature very rapidly. Armenia has fertile corn-lands and broad pastures, and its valleys produce cotton, rice, tobacco, sesame, grapes, and figs. Wheat and the vine thrive, even at very high altitudes. On the higher plateaus the winters are exceedingly severe. The country is rich in minerals, which include silver, lead, iron, and copper.

The Armenians constitute only about one-fifth of the total population of Armenia, although in certain sections, as in the government of Erivan and the vilayet of Van, their nationality predominates. They call themselves Haik in their own language, which belongs to the Indo-European family, although it is considered doubtful whether their remote ancestors were Aryans. The Armenian people is estimated to number between 2,000,000 and 2,500,000. Only about one-half are inhabitants of Armenia. The remainder dwell in various parts of the Turkish dominions, in the region of the Caucasus, Persia, British India, in other parts of the East, in Austria-Hungary, and in the Mediterranean countries. The majority of the Armenians are subjects of the Turkish sultan. Southern Armenia includes a great part of Kurdistan, the country of the Kurds, who are the blood-thirsty foes of their Christian neighbors. Armenia is one of the first countries into which Christianity was introduced. The national Armenian Church is very similar to the Greek Church. Its head is the Catholikos at Etchmiadzin. The official head of the Armenians in the Turkish Empire is a Patriarch at Constantinople, whose authority, however, is very slight. A small fraction of the Armenians (living outside of Armenia) acknowledge the authority of the Pope of Rome. The Armenians are noted for their intelligence, industry, and temperance. They display unusual aptitude for trade, and in many of the cities of the East they are the principal merchants as well as the bankers.

Armenia figures as a kingdom in the Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions, under the name of Urtu. To the Hebrews it was known as Ararat. It formed part of the old Persian Empire, and, after the death of Alexander of Macedon, part of the realm of the Seleucids. It was again independent or semi-independent for several centuries, beginning with the early part of the second century B.C. A brilliant period of national independence extended from the ninth to the eleventh century of the Christian era, when the country was ruled by the Bagratides, a dynasty claiming descent from the ancient Jews. Since the Middle Ages the lot of the Armenians has been unfortunate in the extreme. Their misery culminated in the frightful massacres by the Turks and Kurds of 1895-96.

Ashwanip'i, or Hamilton, also known as the Grand River, a river of Labrador, has its source on the Labrador Highlands (at an elevation of over 2000 feet), in Ashwanipi Lake (in about lat. 52° 30' N. and lon. 66° 30' W.) and other bodies of water, and, after a course of several hundred miles, enters the Atlantic through Esquimaux Bay or Hamilton Inlet, E. of Rigolet. At its mouth it is nearly 14 miles wide. About 250 miles up occur the great falls, known as the Grand Falls of Labrador, which in a width of 200 feet, and with an enormous volume of water, descend in a vertical leap of 316 feet. Above the falls are violent rapids, and below the stream flows for some distance through a chasm, with the walls of rock 400-500 feet in height.

Ashwillett, a post-village of New London co., Conn. The banking point is Norwich. Pop. about 150.

Ashwood Station, a post-hamlet of Wilkinson co., Miss., 4 miles S. of Woodville.

Asia, á'she-á or á'she-á (Fr. Asie, á'see'; Ger. Asien, á'se-en; L., It., Sp., and Port., Asia), the largest of the great divisions of the globe. It has an area of about 16,000,000 sq. m. (with the appertaining islands about 17,000,000 sq. m.), an extent nearly one-third that of all the land-masses taken collectively. Its extreme points are: Cape Tchelyuskin in the N., in lat. 77° 23' (or 77° 40', according to some determinations); Cape Buru, the extremity of the Peninsula of Malacca, in the S., lat. 1° 16' (or 1° 23') N.; Cape Deshnev, formerly known as the East Cape, lon. 169° 44' W.; and Cape Baba, in Asia Minor, lon. 26° 3' E. Its mainland is bounded N. by the Arctic Ocean, E. by the North Pacific, S. by the Indian Ocean, SW. by the Red Sea, which separates it from Africa, and W. by Europe and the Mediterranean, Black, and Caspian seas. Its greatest length is from the Dardanelles to Bering Strait, a distance of about 7000 miles. Asia and Europe form one connected land-mass, the boundary in great part (by an arbitrary division) being constituted by the Ural Mountains. Asia is connected with Africa by the Isthmus of Suez. On the E. it is separated from America by Bering Strait, where the two continents approach to within 54 miles of each other. The coasts are irregular, especially on the S. and E., where they are indented by immense bays and gulfs, forming projections of corresponding magnitude. The principal indentations are the Persian Gulf, Arabian Sea, Bay of Bengal, and Gulf of Siam, on the S. coast, and the Gulf of Tongking, Yellow Sea, Sea of Japan, Sea of Okhotsk, and Sea of Anadyr, on the E. coast. On the N. the indentations are also numerous, but, with the exception of the Gulf of Obi, not of great extent. The principal islands and island groups which may be regarded as appertaining to this division of the globe are, on the S. and E., the Laccadives, Maldives, the Chagos Archipelago, Ceylon, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the Mergui Archipelago, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebes, the Sunda and Banda Islands, the Moluccas, Sulu islands, Philippines, Hainan, Formosa, Chusan, the Liu-kiu and Japanese islands, Saghalin, and the Kurils; on the N., the New Siberian Islands. Geological evidence is conclusive that most of these islands were at one time a part of the Asiatic main, from which they have been severed by crustal breakages, whose positions in areas of weakness are still plainly indicated in the lines and clusters of active volcanoes which contour the coast from Kamchatka to the Sunda Islands. What is called "Wallace's Line," named after the English naturalist Alfred Russell Wallace, divides what are assumed to be the true Asiatic islands from those that properly belong to Australasia, passing between Bali and Lombok and following the trough of Macassar Strait between Borneo and Celebes. The line is thought to mark a physiographic or continental break, and it differentiates two clearly distinct faunas.

The vast extent of Asia, the diversity of its surface, and its physical structure, render it difficult to give a view of its general conformation at once accurate and intelligible. Probably two-thirds of its relief is made up of plateaus and lofty mountains, with the remaining third a depressed lowland or bottom-land. Much the greater part of Siberia, with its continuation westward into Russia, is a low-lying plain or series of plains, which fall off from the southern boundary of mountains, at elevations of 500 to 2000 feet, to the Arctic Ocean, and southward to the depression of the Aral-Caspian basin. The Sea of Aral, whose surface lies at an elevation of 160 feet above the Mediterranean, and the Caspian Sea, with its surface depressed 83 feet below that level, are relicts of a former sea that united with the Black Sea, and at a still earlier, although geologically recent, period with the Arctic Ocean. Neither of these inland bodies of water has an outlet. Low-lying lands are also comprised within the delta region of some of the larger rivers of China, and in that remarkable tract of India, which is in part the fertile valley of the Ganges and in part the inhospitable desert ("Thar") of the Indus, which separates the foot-hills of the Himalayas from the plateau of the peninsula of India (Hindustan). In this latter region we have the counterpart of the lowland of Piedmont, Lombardy, and Venetia—a region of recent fluvial sedimentation, with the materials of destruction brought from the neighboring high mountains filling in a trough of the sea. Before this infilling the greater part of the peninsula of India was separated off from main Asia. The united valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates, the ancient Mesopotamia, is another low-lying tract, constructed mainly of river alluviums. The Dead Sea, in Palestine, with its surface nearly 1300 feet below that of the Mediterranean, is the most depressed portion of the earth's surface. Another remarkable depression is that of Luktohun, in East Turkestan, in about lat. 42° 46' N. and lon. 89° 30' E., where the surface, under the shadow of the great Bogdo-Ola Mountains, drops to 430 feet below sea-level.

Mountains.—The mountains of Asia, conformable to the main direction of the land-mass, have a generally E. and W. trend, with southeastward and northeastward deflections in the eastern part of the continent pointing to a former extra-continental projection. Such finger-marks of past extension are seen in the mountain-backbone of the Malay Peninsula, directed towards the Australian tract, and in the Stanovoi Mountains (escarpment) of Siberia, whose continuity with the Prince of Wales Mountains in Alaska has only recently been interrupted through the formation of Bering Strait. Westward the main mountains of Asia are linked with those of southern Europe (Alpine-Balkan system) by means of the Caucasus and the highlands of Armenia and Asia Minor, so that, while the relations of some of the branches do not as yet appear quite clear, it may be said that one vast crescentic mountain-system, representing, however, widely differing geological periods, sweeps through entire Eurasia from the Bay of Biscay to Bering Strait. The Ural Mountains, which are in one sense Asiatic, and whose continuation northward of the continent is found in the disjointed islands of Nova Zembla, are directed transversely to the trend of land, and they furnish almost the only instance of a mountain-chain of magnitude taking this course. They are of very ancient date, and merely a wreck of their former dimensions, being worn down to only inconsiderable heights. Their highest summits appear to be the Tsi-poo-is and Yaman-Tau, about 5400 feet. See URAL MOUNTAINS.

Central High Asia.—By this name is now frequently designated that lofty portion of the Asiatic continent which is comprised within the great bulwark of the Himalaya Mountains, the Kuen-lun, Tian-Shan ("Mountains of Heaven"), and Altai, and the elevated series of plateaus and closely appressed mountains which constitute the so-called table-land of Tibet and the less lofty Han-Hoi of Western Mongolia. In this region of towering heights, much the loftiest of the globe, summits of 20,000–25,000 feet are numerous; and in the Himalayas alone (with the associated Karakorum) there are three peaks which surpass 28,000 ft. in height—Everest, so far as is known the culminating point of the globe, 29,002 ft.; Kunchain-junga or Kunchinjunga, 28,156 ft.; and Godwin-Austen, sometimes known as peak K<sub>2</sub>, and also as Dapsang, 28,278 ft. Other summits, hardly less lofty, are the Dhawalagiri (26,826 ft.), Nanga-Parbat (26,629 ft.), and Nanda-Devi (25,661 ft.).

The Himalayas, being of comparatively recent formation, dating back to the Eocene and late Cretaceous periods, are of an exceedingly rugged nature, showing all the characteristics of but little-eroded mountains and the full majesty of the Alpine landscape. Time has not yet sufficed to wear down their salient points, although two streams, the Indus and the Brahmaputra, have succeeded in sawing their way across their line of elevation and gaining the sea. They maintain a crest-line of 17,000 ft., and plunge with steep faces to the southern or ocean side, bounding the fertile hot tracts of India known as the "Terai." Among the loftiest of the Trans-Himalayan summits are the Ullug-Mustagh (Kuen-lun, 25,300 ft.) and the Khan-Tengri (Tian-Shan, 24,999 ft.). See HIMALAYA MOUNTAINS, KUEN-LUN, TIAN-SHAN, and ALTAI.

These vast mountain-chains converge in the W. in the highland that lies east of Bokhara and is known as the Pamir,—the "Roof of the World,"—a mountainous tract that sustains a general elevation of 13,000 ft. or more, and is bordered on at least three sides by summits that rise to 23,000–25,000 ft. Of these the famous Mustagh-Ata, which by some measurements is made to be the loftiest of the Asiatic summits lying north of the main Himalayas, is 26,760 ft. Converging to the heights of the Pamir from the S. and W. are the Sulaiman and Hindu-Kush ranges, the latter the main stem that carries the central Asiatic mountains westward, and, through the Paropamisus, Elburz, Armenian highlands, and the Taurus, establishes the connection with the Caucasus and the mountain-system of the Mediterranean. Several summits of the Hindu-Kush rise above 23,000 ft.; Tiratch-Mir, near the foot of the Pamir, has an elevation of 25,400 ft. Other mountains of Asia, whose characteristics will be found stated under their respective heads, are the Lebanon, in Syria; the Ghats, of the Peninsula of India; Alai, a western spur of the Tian-Shan; Yun-ling, Nan-ling, and Nan-shan-ling of China; Khingan, of Mongolia; and Yablonoi and Tatar, of Siberia. See PAMIR.

The height of the snow-line on the main Himalayas occupies a position of about 15,500–16,500 ft., being somewhat higher on the sunny and moister southern slopes. Over many parts of bleak Tibet, where there is but little precipitation, the snow-line rises as high as 18,000 and even 19,000 ft. The glaciers of the Himalayas and Karakorum are especially magnificent, and vastly exceed in development those of the Alps of Europe. They descend deep into the valleys, and the longest, like the Biafo and Baltoro, measure 30–40 miles in length. The evidences of a past more extensive glaciation are here, as in the mountains of Europe and America, very apparent.

Volcanoes.—The Asiatic mountains, differing from the Andean system of America, but agreeing in this respect with the Alps, are pre-eminently free from volcanoes. Only in the region of continuing weakness of the crust, as in the ocean or insular strip extending from Kamohatka through the Japanese Islands and the Philippines to Java, and in the Mediterranean-Caspian tract, which, until well into the Tertiary period (and later) was the theatre of almost catastrophic movements, do we find volcanoes of size and forceful activity, and others that have only recently become extinct or dormant. Of the loftier of such summits may be enumerated Elburz, in the Caucasus (if the Caucasus be considered a part of Asia), 18,470 ft.; Demavend, on the southern borders of the Caspian, 19,350 (18,600?) ft.; Ararat, on the borders of Armenia and Persia, 17,090 (16,920) ft.; Arjish-Dagh, westward of the Anti-Taurus chain, in Antolia, about 13,300 ft.; Kliutchev, in Kamohatka, 15,750 ft.; Fujiyama, in Japan, about 12,400 ft.; Mayón, in Luzon, 8274 ft.; and Somboru, in Java, about 12,000 ft. The most destructive centre of volcanic action is to-day the region of the Sunda Sea, following from Java to Celebes and the islands beyond. From this region are recorded the violent eruptions of Papandayang, in Java (1772); Temboro, in Sumbawa (1815); and Krakatau (a small island off Java), in 1883; which, with those of Coseguina, in Nicaragua, in 1835, and Pelée, in Martinique, in 1902, were the most catastrophic eruptions of which history makes record.

Plateaus and Deserts.—Inner High Asia is occupied by plateaus of varying elevation, ranging from 1500 to 15,000 feet (Tibet), whose surface is largely of a steppe character, and elsewhere desert. The Kuen-lun is properly the dividing-line between the high and the low plateaus, the latter being in the W. comprised mainly in the basin of the Tarim, and in the eastern section in the great desert of Gobi or Shamo. Lob-Nor, a lake of shifting position, which receives the Tarim as an affluent, occupies a level only 2590 ft. above the sea. About 200 miles directly north of it is the "pit" of Luktohun, whose surface, as has already been seen, drops to 430 ft. below sea-level, although faced by mountains directly to the north of it of 15,000–16,000 ft. elevation (Bogdo-Ola). The Desert of Gobi or Shamo has many of the characteristics of the Sahara, but is, on the whole, of a much less forbidding nature. Many of its parts are well watered, and support a fairly luxuriant vegetation of willow, poplar, and salicaceous and other plants. These more fertile tracts afford a fairly comfortable home to hordes of migrating Mongols and their flocks. The wind-swept sands are seemingly in part of an oceanic character, elsewhere they are merely the product of disintegration of the subjacent and surrounding rock-masses. Recent discoveries have brought to light the remains of numerous habitations partially buried beneath mounds or dunes, which give unmistakable evidence of a much more extensive occupation of the region than is found to-day. (See Gobi.) Desert conditions also prevail over the northwest of Hindustan (Indian Desert), in Beluchistan, in parts of Persia, and over perhaps the major part of Arabia; but the greater portion of these districts of desert-lands is more properly a belonging of the African continent, or at least of that ancient continental block of land—"Gondwana Land"—now in part occupied by the trough of the Indian Ocean, which, before the more modern construction of the Asiatic continent, helped to form a united Indo-Africa.

Tibet, the high plateau of central Asia, and the loftiest abode of man, was until recently considered to be a tectonically constructed plateau; but more accurate geographical research has shown the plateau-structure to be, in the main, of secondary origin. The region is one of closely appressed mountain-folds or ranges, the deep valleys of which have been filled up to a high level by mountain waste and other forms of detrital material being deposited over their floors. Many of the old mountain-tops now lie buried in these sedimented valleys, and over them are scattered a vast number of standing and running waters. At Thokjalung, at an altitude of 16,335 ft., is found the loftiest permanent habitation of man in the Eastern Hemisphere,—about 300 ft. less high than his loftiest post, Chachani, in Peru, in the New World. (See TIBET.) Other extensive plateaus having no structural relation with Tibet are those of Persia (Iranian Plateau), the Dekkan and Mysore.

Rivers.—Asia shares with South America in being the most extensive distributor of interior waters. The streams of greatest magnitude, arranged in the order of their length, are the Ob, Yenisei, Yang-tse-kiang, Lena, Amur, Hoang-ho, Indus, and Ganges-Brahmaputra; the first three of about equal length (3100 miles), and almost ranking with the Nile, Amazon, and Mississippi-Missouri. Other streams of magnitude are the Euphrates and Tigris, in the Mesopotamian region; the Ural; the Amu-Darya and Syr-Darya, both affluents of the Sea of Aral; the Irtysh, Indigirka, and Kolyma, in Siberia; and the Irawadi, Menam, and Mekong, in Burma and Indo-China. Most of the great Siberian rivers flow northward to the Arctic Ocean, following in the course of the decline of land for which a gentle uplift in the S. is responsible. This condition has almost entirely impaired their usefulness as trade-carriers, since entry into their mouths is barred during the greater part of the year, and even in most favorable seasons the ice-strewn Kara Sea has made approach to the streams all but impracticable. However, a few attempts to carry merchandise and freight into the heart of Asia from Europe by this route have proved successful. The Yang-tse-kiang is the largest of the Asiatic rivers after those of Siberia. With its numerous tributaries it is assumed to afford navigable water-ways of 12,000 miles, but much of the course of the main stream is obstructed by rapids and shallows. The tide penetrates for more than 200 miles up the estuary, which is 60 miles wide at the mouth, and in many places 300 ft. deep. See YANG-TZE-KIANG, HOANG-HO, MEKONG, IRAWADI, GANGES, INDUS, etc.

Lakes.—Asia, for its extent, is singularly deficient in lakes, although in the Caspian Sea, which it holds jointly with Europe, it has an extent of interior water which is five times the area of Lake Superior, and in the Aral Sea another basin which about equals the Victoria Nyansa of Africa. Between these two saline waters is the sand or steppe plateau of the Ust-Urt. The Sea of Aral, although occupying a position considerably above sea-level, has no outlet. Its main affluents are the Amu-Darya (anc. Oxus) and Syr-Darya (Jaxartes), the former of which has been assumed to have flowed at one time into the Caspian. Recent researches have, however, shown the inaccuracy of this view. (See CASPIAN SEA AND ARAL SEA.) Another lake of interior drainage, and, like most of the Asiatic lakes, undergoing desiccation, is Balkhash, a shallow pan situated in the Steppe Province, which forms a continuation of the Aral-Caspian Basin. It covers an area of about 8000 sq. m. (about a fifth less than Lake Erie), and receives for its chief affluent the Ili. Lake Baikal, in southern Siberia, is much the largest accumulation of fresh water in Asia, but its present extent (13,000 sq. m.), as is shown by the elevated ancient beach-lines, is hardly a measure of the area that was formerly covered by it. Its surface lies at an elevation of about 1550 ft. above the sea, while its bottom sinks to the prodigious depth of upward of 4000 ft. below it. Soundings have been made indicating a depth of water of 5600 ft. It is frequently assumed to be a relict of the sea, isolated by elevation of the land, and its waters to-day contain a number of marine types of life (sponges, worms, crustaceans, and fishes, and even a species of seal). (See BAIKAL, LAKE.) Most of the Asiatic lakes south of the Siberian mountains are concentrated in the steppe region of western Mongolia and the loftier plateaus of Tibet, and are, in the main, of inconsiderable volume, though at times spreading over large areas of surface. They are in the nature of true steppe or saline waters, most of them without outlets, and many of them shifting their positions at irregular periods. Among the better known of these are the Kuku-Nor ("blue sea"), elevated about 10,070 ft., Tengri-Nor, and Lob-Nor. Horpa-Cho, in Tibet, with its surface nearly 20,000 ft. above the sea, and therefore 4000 ft. above the line of perpetual snow in the main Himalayas, is much the loftiest sheet of water known on the globe.

Steppes.—No account of Asia would be complete without a special reference to that configuration or physiognomy of the surface which makes the steppe-landscape of Turkestan and western Siberia and of the region immediately adjacent. The steppes are generally vast expanses of naked or nearly naked land, whose dreariness is relieved by beautiful verdure only during a few weeks of spring and summer. Numerous flat sheets of water, saline and otherwise, are scattered over the surface, sometimes so interlacing as to convert the region almost into a morass. The steppe of Baraba, between Omsk and Tomsk, as we are informed by Altoff, "is as flat as the surface of a lake, and the soil is formed of sand so fine that the inhabitants have no idea what a stone is like. Between the Tobol and the Ob the country is one huge marsh, impassable in summer except along the margins of the rivers which drain off the superfluous moisture of the land in their immediate neighborhood." One of the most famous of the steppes of Turkestan is the Bekpak-dala, or "Hunger-Steppe."

Climate.—Asia, from its vast extent, stretching from far beyond the polar circle nearly to the equator, possesses every variety of climate, from excessive heat to the most intense cold. This variety of climate is further increased by local influences, particularly by the great heights of its table-lands and mountains, by its comparatively compact configuration, and by the great extension of land it presents towards the pole. Beyond the 56th parallel of N. lat., which includes the major part of Siberia, the ground is permanently frozen, in some places to a great depth,—at Yakutsk to a depth of 600 ft.,—and a degree of cold exceeding 90° below the freezing-point is here of annual occurrence; while in other parts of the same region, such as Tobolsk and Irkutsk, the summers are equal to those of Berlin and Cherbourg, but are succeeded by winters of great severity. Nowhere is the temperature known to descend to that extreme low point which is found in the region of the Siberian "pole of cold." At Yakutsk, which is still considerably south of the Arctic Circle, a registry of —80° to —89° is of almost annual occurrence; and at Verkhojansk a cold of —90° to —94° has been noted several times. On the other hand, the burning sand-plains of Arabia, Beluchistan, and NW. India frequently exhibit a summer heat of 115°–125° (shade), with an excess of 30°–40° in the sun, so that the actual thermometric range in Asia shows an extreme of 240°. Baron Von Toll found in Siberia, on the borders of the Arctic Sea, in lat. 73° N., a July heat of 93°, and the recent explorations of the depression of Lukh-chun have revealed there a temperature of 118° (147° in the sun)—the temperature of the Sahara. The violent winds called typhoons prevail in southeastern Asia between lat. 4° and 40° N., their sphere of action diminishing westerly to a space included between 13° and 26° N. lat. These destructive winds blow at all seasons, but rarely between May and December. The monsoons, which also prevail in this quarter of the world, extend into Asia from their central region in the Indian Ocean as far as lat. 36° N., including in their reach China, all Hindustan, the Punjab, and part of Tibet. They blow regularly from the SW. from April to October, and from the NE. from October to April; the change being accompanied by heavy rain and violent storms of thunder and lightning. The rainless regions or regions of deficient rainfall of Asia are of vast extent; one of these extends from Delhi, in northern India, to near Nertchinsk, in southeastern Siberia, a distance of about 2500 miles, with a width of about 1200 miles. It thus includes part of Tibet, the great Desert of Gobi, and a part of Mongolia,—a space estimated to comprise 2,000,000 sq. m. Even over the more favored portions of the plateau region of central High Asia the precipitation rarely exceeds 20–25 inches, and over much of Arabia, Syria, Persia, Beluchistan, and Bokhara, it is reduced to 7 inches or less. On the other hand, the Western Ghats, SE. of Bombay, have an annual rainfall of 400–500 inches or more, which is even surpassed in the Khasi Hills of Assam. In 1861 there is a record for this latter region of 865 inches, of which 366 inches fell in the month of July,—the most extraordinary degree of precipitation that has ever been noted.

Mineral Wealth.—All the precious and useful minerals are found in Asia. Diamonds are found in Bundelound, the Dekkan, Ural Mountains, Ceylon, and other places. Amethysts, rubies (Burma), sapphires (Ceylon), turquoises, carnelians, lapis-lazuli, topazes (Siberia), and other precious stones are found in many different quarters. Gold is, perhaps, most abundant in the Altai and Ural Mountains and in vast placer areas of Siberia. Silver is a product of China, Asiatic Russia, and the Japanese and Ottoman empires; mercury, of China, Tibet, Japan, India, and Ceylon. Tin is met with in most parts of the Malay Peninsula, in Burma, China, and some of the islands of the Malay Archipelago; copper and iron in Japan, Tibet, Hindustan, Persia, and Turkey, in most of which countries lead also is found. Coal exists in vast deposits in China, also in Japan, Saghalin, and Hainan, and represents an as yet little developed wealth. Petroleum is extensively welled in the Caucasus, in Burma, and Sumatra; and the best quality of graphite is obtained in Siberia. Salt is largely diffused over the continent, and constitutes an important industry.

Vegetation.—The vegetation of Asia is as various as its climate. The extreme S. portions alone present all the characteristics of tropical vegetation, which in the forests and jungle-tracts of the lowlands and basal slopes of the mountains (3000–5000 feet) exhibits nearly the full luxuriance of the forests of South America. Among the more striking forms of vegetation of this zone are the cocoanut and betel-palms, teak, ebony, banyan, fig, rosewood, magnolia, rhododendron, various laurels, and bamboo, to which cultivation has added the cinnamon, nutmeg, ginseng, coffee, tea, camphor, cotton, cane, and rice. To this tropical zone succeeds a zone of evergreen oaks, of magnolias and giant rhododendrons, of firs and cypresses, upon which follow the tracts occupied by the temperate and subalpine floras. Various temperate fruits, in areas of exceptional heat, are cultivated at elevations even of 9000–10,000 feet, and rye and barley ripen at 14,000–15,000 feet. A remarkable peculiarity of the flora of eastern Asia is the prevalence of tropical types throughout much of the temperate region. No cereals are cultivated in Asia N. of about lat. 62° N. The tea-plant is cultivated in China and Indo-China, between lat. 17° and 35° N., lon. 92° and 120° E., which includes Assam; but it is most successful between the parallels of 25° and 33° N. It is also cultivated in Japan and in the peninsula of India. Cotton is grown in India, Burma, Siam, China, and Turkestan. Sugar and indigo are produced in India and in the other countries to the E. Ceylon and Java are famed for their coffee. Cinnamon luxuriates in Ceylon; and nutmegs, cloves, and pepper are products of the Malay Archipelago. In the latter, also, the sago-palm attains the highest perfection.

Fauna.—The fauna of the Asiatic continent is properly a component of three largely distinct faunal associations: 1, a north-temperate or boreal, found in Siberia, Turkestan, and a portion of the more southerly mountain-tracts, and having a strong relationship with the similarly placed faunas of Europe and North America; 2, a desert or north African fauna, occupying Arabia, Persia, and much of the region eastward to the Indian Desert, and characterized by the presence of such forms as the lion, panther, hyena, jackal, numerous antelopes, one or more species of striped ass, and the ostrich; and 3, an essentially tropical fauna, constituting the fauna of the Oriental Realm of zoogeographers, which inhabits the forests, jungles, and savannahs of Indo-Malaysia and southern China, with the major islands of the Malay Archipelago. This is the home of the tiger, which, however, is also a constituent of the boreal (Siberian and Mongolian) fauna, the Indian elephant, rhinoceros, Malay tapir, bear, several large deer, and numerous species of monkey, among which are two representatives of the anthropoid apes,—the long-armed gibbon and the orang of Borneo and Sumatra. The forests teem with birds of bright plumage, among which the pheasants (peacock, argus, impeyan, and golden-pheasant) are conspicuous. The common barnyard-fowl is commonly assumed to have descended from the jungle-fowl of this region, Gallus Bankiva. Among the reptiles are the gaviol or crocodile of the Ganges, python, and cobra. As components of the boreal fauna we find the wolf, fox, bear, glutton, badger, sable, ermine, mink, beaver, marmot, lemming, elk, stag, and reindeer, most of them circumpolar forms. The camel and tiger both breed in the northern region, and it has been shown from fossil remains found in the New Siberian Islands that at a quite recent, almost modern, period the tiger, rhinoceros, buffalo, wild horse, and mammoth penetrated considerably beyond the 70th parallel of N. lat. The carcasses of mammoths in an extraordinary fine state of preservation have been obtained from the frozen tundra soils of some of the Siberian river-valleys. There is no question that there have been faunal interchanges between Asia (Siberia) and North America, and it is almost equally certain that a considerable part of the so-called European and African faunas have been primarily derived from Asia.

People.—The population of Asia (with the appertaining islands) is estimated to exceed 850,000,000, which is more than one-half of the total population of the globe. It contains a vast variety of tribes and nations. Asia is the home of the yellow race, which embraces the greater part of its population, and of which the Chinese and the Japanese are the principal branches. The Chinese, Tibetans, and a large part of the population of Farther India (Burmese, Siamese, etc.), constitute linguistically the Indo-Chinese group of peoples. The Koreans are akin to the Chinese and Japanese. In the N.E. corner of the continent are various Hyperborean tribes of the yellow race,—Tchukchis, Koriaks, Kamohatkans, etc. The Uralo-Altaic (Turko-Tataric, Turanian) family is spread over a great part of central and western Asia (Siberia, Mongolia, Turkestan, the Steppes, Asia Minor, etc.). It embraces the Tungusian peoples (the main branch of which is constituted by the Manchus), various Finnic tribes, the Mongols, and the Turkic peoples, represented by the Tartars (Tatars), Turkomans, Uzbeks, Kirghises, Yakuts, Osmanli Turks (the ruling race in Turkey), etc.

The Caucasian race (the so-called white race) in Asia consists of Indo-Europeans (Aryans), Semites, and Caucasian peoples (tribes of the Caucasus). The Indo-Europeans are composed of two main divisions, the Indian peoples and the Iranians, to the former of which belong the Hindu inhabitants of India, and to the latter the Persians, Afghans, Beluchis, Kurds, etc. The Armenians speak an Aryan language. Other Indo-European elements in the population of Asia are the Russians, who constitute the bulk of the population of Siberia, and the Greeks, who are very numerous in the Turkish dominions. The Semites consist of the Arabs, of whom a large fraction live outside of Arabia, and the Jews.

In India there are several important peoples of the Dravidian stock, constituting a distinct linguistic group. In Ceylon are found the Singalese. Malacca is in great part peopled by the Malays, belonging to the brown race.

The principal religions in the southeastern half of Asia are Brahminism, Buddhism (with Lamaism), Confucianism, Taoism, and Shintoism. Mohammedism is the dominant religion in the other half, and also prevails in parts of India. The bulk of the Asiatic subjects of Russia, as well as a considerable part of those of Turkey, are Christians, and Christian missionaries have made numerous converts in many parts. Only a small fraction of the Jewish race now has its home in Asia. It is in Asia that all the great religions of the world have originated.

Asia is generally held to be the cradle of the human race. The dawn of history here appears to be nearly contemporaneous with that in Africa.

The civilization of the Euphrates-Tigris region is as ancient as that of Egypt. Among the realms of antiquity in western Asia were Babylonia, Assyria, the Hebrew kingdom (coeval with which was the maritime greatness of Phœnicia), the Median and Persian empires, the Greek kingdom of the Seleucids, Parthia, and Pontus. The civilization of China reaches back to remote antiquity. The Romans established their dominion in Asia Minor, Syria, and Mesopotamia. For a long period part of Asia belonged to the Byzantine Empire. In the seventh century the Arabs, under the impulse of Islam, entered upon their great career of conquest, and for centuries western Asia and Arabic Spain enjoyed civilization in advance of the rest of the world. At the beginning of the eleventh century began the Mohammedan invasions of India. The thirteenth century witnessed the rise of the great Mongol realm built up by Genghis Khan and his successors. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the Turks established a mighty empire in Asia and Europe. In 1498 the Portuguese first made their way to India by water. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the sway of Russia was extended over Siberia. In the eighteenth century the English, driving the French from the field, laid the foundations of their empire in India. By the year 1876 Russia had become mistress of Turkestan. In the second half of the nineteenth century the French brought part of Farther India under their authority. The most remarkable phase of Asiatic history in recent years has been the appearance of Japan as a great military and naval power.

Political Divisions.—Considerably more than one-third of the area of Asia is included in the Russian Empire. In the 6,500,000 sq. m. of Russian territory are comprised Siberia (including Western Siberia, Eastern Siberia, the Amur Province, Primorskaya, or Littoral Province, and Saghalin), the so-called Central Asiatic dominions (the Steppes, Turkestan, the Transcasian Territory), and the Caucasus (or the southern half of the Caucasus,—i.e., Transcaucasia, if we take the range of the Caucasus to be the boundary between Europe and Asia). The subjects of the Czar number about 25,000,000. About one-fourth of the continent is included in the Chinese Empire (China proper, Manchuria, Mongolia, Tibet, East Turkestan, Drungaria). The Chinese dominions have an area of about 4,000,000 sq. m., and a population of between 300,000,000 and 400,000,000, the great bulk of whom are in China proper, the rest of the empire being thinly peopled. About one-tenth of Asia belongs to England. The British possessions embrace India (including Burma), Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Cyprus, Hong Kong, Singapore, Aden, etc., and contain about 300,000,000 inhabitants. China proper and British India comprise at least two-fifths of the population of the globe. The possessions of the sultan of Turkey are Asia Minor, Turkish Armenia, Kurdistan, Mesopotamia, Syria and Palestine, many islands on the coast of Asia Minor, the western part of Arabia (Hejaz and Yemen), and a district in eastern Arabia (El Haas). These regions, with an area of about 700,000 sq. m., contain between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000 inhabitants. Independent Arabia (Oman, Nejd, Hadramaut, etc.), which is as large as the whole of Asiatic Turkey, has about 2,000,000 inhabitants. Persia has an area of about 800,000 sq. m., and its population is estimated at about 10,000,000. The dominions of Japan (including Formosa) have an area of over 150,000 sq. m. and a population in the neighborhood of 50,000,000. In the southeastern corner of Asia is a region of about 250,000 sq. m., under the dominion of France, known as French Indo-China, with a population of approximately 5,000,000. Its component parts are Tongking, Annam, Cochin China, Cambodia, and the Laos territory. Siam has an area of about 200,000 sq. m. and a population of about 6,000,000. Afghanistan has approximately the same area and population. Beluchistan, S. of Afghanistan, mostly ruled by native khans, is considered a dependency of British India. Korea has an area of about 80,000 sq. m., and its population is estimated to be in the neighborhood of 10,000,000. The khanates of Bokhara and Khiva are dependencies of Russia. In the Himalayas is the independent state of Nepal, with an area exceeding 50,000 sq. m. and a population of 3,000,000 or 4,000,000. In the same mountain region is the little state of Bhutan. The Malay Peninsula contains several states acknowledging the suzerainty of England or Siam. Portugal and France retain unimportant possessions in India. Several European powers have obtained a foothold on the coast of China. The great archipelago to the SE. of Asia has for its possessors the Netherlands, the United States, Great Britain, and Portugal.

Asia, a province of the Roman Empire, constituted in the latter part of the second century B.C. It embraced the western part of Asia Minor, comprising Mysia, Lydia, Caria, and Phrygia.

Asiago, â-se-â-go, a town of Italy, province of Vicenza, the chief town of the district termed the "Seven Communes," inhabited by a race of German descent, 22 miles N. of Vicenza. Pop. 2000 (commune, 6000).

Asia Minor, the name anciently given to the great western peninsula of Asia, between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, which in modern times has received the name of Anatolia. The principal ancient divisions were: Bithynia, Paphlagonia, and Pontus, on the N. coast; Mysia, Lydia, and Caria, on the W. coast; Lycia, Pamphylia, and Cilicia, on the S. coast; and Phrygia, Galatia, Cappadocia, Lycaonia, and Pisidia, in the interior. On the W. coast were the Greek colonies founded by the Æolians, Ionians, and Dorians. See ANATOLIA.

Asiatic Archipelago. See MALAY ARCHIPELAGO.

Asiento de Hambato, Ecuador. See AMBATO.

Asientos de Ibarra, â-se-en-toce dâ se-nâr-râ, a mining town of Mexico, in the state of Aguascalientes, 48 miles SE. of Zacatecas.

Asimagomy, â-se-mâ-go-mee, a lake in Canada, province of Ontario. It is about 12 miles in length and from 2 to 4 miles in breadth, and discharges into the E. extremity of Lake Superior by a stream about 36 miles long.

Asinara, â-se-nâr-râ, a small island off the NW. extremity of the island of Sardinia. It is about 10 miles long.

Asingo, a lake of French Congo, N. of the lower course of the Ogowe.

Asir, â-seen', a vilayet of Turkey, in Arabia, occupying the high land on the confines of Hejaz, Yemen, and Nejd. It is situated near the 19th parallel of N. lat., and comprises several fertile valleys, included within a lofty chain of mountains, whose highest points reach to 6000 and 8000 feet. In the lower valleys the date-palm grows; cotton is also cultivated. Higher up, the date-groves are interspersed with almonds, figs, apricots, peaches, and vines; and the sides of the hills, where they offer any soil, are clothed with juniper. The people are Wahabis. Principal town, Menadir.

Ask, âk, a town of Persia, province of Masanderan, at the foot of Mount Demavend, 5900 feet above the sea.

Askabad, â-kâ-bâd', or Askhabad, â-kâ-bâd', capital of the Russian Transcasian Territory, on the Transcasian railway, 290 miles ESE. of Mikhailovsk, the seaward terminus. Lat. 38° N.; lon. 58° 22' E. Since the building of this railway Askabad has become an active commercial centre. Pop. in 1897, 19,428, composed of Persians, Russians, Armenians, Kurds, and Jews. The circle of Askabad was formerly known as Akhal-Teke.

Askalon. See ASCALON.

As'kam, a post-hamlet of Luzerne co., Pa., on the Lehigh Valley R., 5 miles SW. of Wilkesbarre.

Askeaton, as-kâ-ton, a small town of Ireland, co. of Limerick, on the Deel, 17 miles WSW. of Limerick.

Askeaton, a post-village of Brown co., Wis., 15 miles by rail SW. of Depere, its banking point.

As'kerne, or As'kerne, a village of England, co. of York, West Riding, 7 miles by rail N. by W. of Doncaster.

Askersund, âs'kpr-soond', a town of Sweden, 27 miles SW. of Örebro, on Lake Vetter. Pop. about 1500.

As'kew, a post-village of Lee co., Ark., on the Mississippi, 25 miles above Helena.

It is 570 feet below the level of the sea and of an oval form, 10 miles in length from N. to S. and about 4 miles in breadth. It is the lowest point of the African continent. The shores are covered with a thick salt crust, which in most places rests on the ground, the waters having subsided. Numerous caravans resort to this lake to carry away the salt.

As'sam', a chief-commissionership of British India, located mainly in the basin of the Brahmaputra, where that river skirts the southern base of the Himalayas. It is situated between lat. 23° 15' and 28° 30' N. and lon. 89° 45' and 97° 15' E. It lies between Bengal and Burma, and has Bhutan on the NW. It comprises three divisions (besides dependencies): the Brahmaputra valley, in which are the towns of Gowhaty or Gauhati (capital of the district of Kamrup), Goalpara, Nowgong, Tezpur, Sibsagar, Kohima, and Dibrugarh; the hill country, including the Garo, Khasi (Coochsyah), and Jaintia Hills, and Cachar; and Sylhet, which includes the densely peopled valley of the Surma, a tributary of the Brahmaputra. Connected with Assam are Manipur, the Naga Hills, and other districts. The area of Assam, exclusive of dependencies, is 56,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 6,122,201, of which about 3,000,000 were Hindus, 1,500,000 Mohammedans, 9000 Buddhists, and 17,000 Christians.

Assam has a very large number of rivers, tributaries of the Brahmaputra, which water very fertile valleys. There are extensive jungles and forests, and the flora is extremely rich and exuberant. Gold is found in nearly all the mountain-streams that flow into the Brahmaputra, and also in that river itself. Coal, petroleum, and iron are among the other mineral products. Assam has the heaviest annual rainfall of any region on the globe. There is a record of 805 inches in one year (1861) on the Khasi Hills, of which 366 inches fell in the month of July. The rainy season lasts six months, commencing in April and ending in October. During this season one universal deluge prevails, and all the labors of the field are necessarily suspended. Earthquakes are frequent.

Rice is the principal crop. Within recent times the culture of tea has reached vast dimensions, the bulk of the Indian product coming from Assam. The tea-plant grows wild on the mountains. Mustard, cotton, and opium are extensively cultivated. Coffee, in its natural state, also grows luxuriantly, but attracts little attention. The betel-nut palm is cultivated to a large extent. Among other products are sugar, ginger, pepper, and tobacco. The rattan grows wild and forms impenetrable jungles. The plantain grows abundantly on most of the hills. Lac, india-rubber, silk, and ivory are important products. The forests yield valuable woods. Wild elephants are numerous, and the forests are inhabited by the rhinoceros. Tigers, leopards, bears, buffaloes, wild hogs, porcupines, flying squirrels, otters, and an infinite variety of monkeys and snakes, including the python and cobra, are common. The white ant is very destructive. Crocodiles and tortoises are also numerous.

Brahminism has superseded Buddhism as the religion of Assam. The Assamese language resembles the Bengali. There is not a single large town in the whole of Assam. The administrative head-quarters are at Shillong, in the Khasi Hills. Assam was acquired by the British at the close of the first Burmese war in 1826.

Astrabad (anc. Hyrca'nia), a small but fertile and well-wooded province of Persia, bordering on the Caspian at its SE. corner. Capital, Astrabad.

Astrabad, As'trā-bād, or Asterabad, As'ter-ā-bād, a city of Persia, capital of a province of its own name, situated at the foot of the N. slope of the Elbrus range, and on a small stream which falls into Astrabad Bay, in the SE. part of the Caspian, about 20 miles below. It has a circuit of about 3 miles, and is surrounded by a dry ditch and by a mud wall, or mound, on which a low parapet, loop-holed for musketry, has been erected. A great part of the town is now nothing but ruins, which attest its former importance. The large extent of open space within the town, laid out in fine gardens, is one of its attractive features. Its pestilential atmosphere has procured for it the surname of City of the Plague. Its trade, which is extensive, and in which the Russians take an active part, passes through the port of Ges. The surrounding country is fruitful. The population in recent years has been variously estimated at from 8000 (without surroundings) to 30,000. In 1898 a terrible conflagration swept over the town.

Astrakhan, a government of Russia, in Europe, on the NW. coast of the Caspian Sea. Area, about 90,000 sq. m. It is divided into 2 nearly equal parts by the Volga, which traverses it from NW. to SE. Its coast-line is about 500 miles in length, and is crowded throughout its whole extent with small islands, rocks, and shifting sand-banks. The region consists wholly of vast steppes, and the soil is composed largely of mud, salt, and sand intermixed. A few fertile tracts are met with on the Volga, including some excellent pastures. Here corn is grown, together with fruits, tobacco, and cotton. Immense numbers of sheep, cattle, horses, and camels are reared. Salt lakes and salt marshes are numerous throughout the province. The fisheries of the Volga and Caspian are of great value. Many thousand persons are employed in taking fish, chiefly sturgeon; from the roe and bladder large quantities of isinglass and caviare are manufactured. The climate is marked by great extremes. Pop. in 1897, 994,775. Capital, Astrakhan.

Astrakhan, âs-trâ-kân', a city of Russia, capital of a government of its own name, on an island in the Volga, about 40 miles from its embouchure in the Caspian Sea. Lat.  $46^{\circ} 21' N.$ ; lon.  $48^{\circ} 2' E.$  The city lies about 68 feet below the level of the Black Sea. It is irregularly built, with crooked streets, and most of the houses are of wood. The general appearance of the town has somewhat of an Oriental character. The principal architectural attraction is the Kremlin, with its 2 cathedrals. By the side of the many churches are a number of mosques and heathen temples. Astrakhan is the seat of Greek and Armenian archbishops. The bazaars present a scene of extraordinary activity. The sturgeon and other fisheries form the staple trade of the city, immense quantities of fish, caviare, and isinglass being exported to foreign countries. Astrakhan is the chief port of the Caspian and the great entrepôt of the trade of European Russia with Turkestan, the Transcasian Territory, Persia, and a large section of Transcaucasia. Between 1500 and 2000 vessels descend the Volga to the city yearly, while as many as 4000 enter from the Caspian. The climate of Astrakhan is unhealthy. The population in 1897 was 113,601. There are in all about 25,000 non-Russian inhabitants, including Persians, Armenians, Tartars, and Jews.

As'trolabe Bay, a bay on the NE. coast of Kaiser Wilhelm's Land, New Guinea, between lat.  $5^{\circ}$  and  $5^{\circ} 30' S.$ , lon.  $145^{\circ} 40' E.$  On its shores are the ports of Friedrich-Wilhelmshafen (the capital), Stephansport, and Constantinhafen.

Astros, âs'tros, or Astro, âs'tro, a town of Greece, in Arcadia, 15 miles S. of Argos, on the Gulf of Nauplia.

Astudillo, âs-too-nee-yo, a town of Spain, in Leon, 22 miles NNE. of Palencia. Pop. of commune, 3000.

Astura, âs-too'râ, a village of Italy, province of Rome, on a peninsula in the Mediterranean (anc. Insula Asturæ), at the mouth of the river Astura, 39 miles SE. of Rome. It has a lofty tower, supposed to occupy the site of the villa of Cicero, near which he was put to death by order of Antony, 43 B.C.

Asturias, âs-too'rê-âs, an ancient division of Spain (now included principally in the modern province of Oviedo). Early in the Middle Ages it was the kingdom of Asturias (from which sprang the kingdom of Leon), and the only part of the peninsula unconquered by the Arabs. In antiquity it was inhabited by a race who maintained their independence against the Carthaginians, but were subdued by the Romans in the time of Augustus. The heir to the Spanish throne has the title of Prince of Asturias.

Asturica Augusta, ancient name of ASTORGA.

Asuay, a department of Ecuador. See ASUAY.

Asulkan Glacier, in the Selkirk Range of British Columbia, near the station of Glacier House, on the Canadian Pacific R. The neighboring Asulkan Pass has an elevation of 7794 feet.

Asunción, an islet of the Ladrões. See ASSUMPTION.

Asunción, â-soon-se-on' (formerly called in English Assumption), or Nuestra Señora de la Asunción, a city of South America, capital of Paraguay, on the Paraguay River, 650 miles N. of Buenos Aires. Lat.  $25^{\circ} 18' S.$ ; lon.  $57^{\circ} 36' W.$  It is at the head of navigation for sea-going vessels. It is a bishop's see. Founded in 1536 by a colony of Spaniards, from its advantageous position it became in a few years a city of importance. It has a cathedral, a government palace, public library, custom-house, military hospital, theatre, and college. In 1869 the city was bombarded and plundered by the Brazilians. The inhabitants trade in tobacco, sugar, hides, mandiocca, cedar, and especially in yerba maté, or Paraguay tea. The city has several banks and newspapers. Pop. in 1900, 51,719.

Asunción, or Nueva Esparta, nûvâ-âs-pân'tâ, a town of Venezuela, on the E. side of the island of Margarita. Pop. 3000.

As'wad', or Assuad, a great oasis of the Sahara, 6 days' journey N. of Timbuktu.

Asylum, a station in Mercer co., N.J., on the Belvidere Division of the Pennsylvania R., 4 miles NW. of Trenton. Here is the New Jersey Lunatic Asylum.

Asylum, a post-village of Bradford co., Pa., in Asylum township, about 10 miles SE. of Towanda. The township is bounded on the NE. by the Susquehanna River. Pop. in 1900, 883.

Aszaló, âs'sôh-lô, a market-town of Hungary, 25 miles E. by W. of Kaschau. Pop. about 1500.

Aszód, âs'sôd', a town of Hungary, 22 miles by rail NE. of Budapest. Pop. about 2500.

Atabapo, â-tâ-bâ'po, a river of Venezuela, rises in lat.  $3^{\circ} 10' N.$ , lon.  $66^{\circ} 44' W.$ , flows nearly W. for about 70 or 80 miles, then turning N. falls into the Orinoco at San Fernando de Atabapo. Length, about 140 miles. It forms part of the boundary between Colombia and Venezuela.

Atacama, â-tâ-kâ'mâ, a province of Chile, is bounded by the province of Antofagasta on the N., by the Argentine Republic on the E., by the province of Coquimbo on the S., and by the Pacific Ocean on the W. It consists mainly of elevated desert plains and arid hills; but in the S. and among the Andes there are fertile valleys. The province has rich mines of gold, copper, and silver,—the two latter metals being produced in great abundance,—and also extensive deposits of salt and nitrates. It is traversed by several railways. Capital, Copiapó. Area, about 28,350 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 69,372.

Atacama Desert, a barren, inhospitable, elevated tract of western South America, occupying the northern part of Chile, and forming mainly a littoral to the provinces of Antofagasta and Atacama. It rises from the sea eastward to the western foot of the Andes, and attains an elevation in parts of 10,000–13,000 feet, passing off into the high zone of the bounding mountains. More particularly in its elevated parts the surface is covered with saline, borax, and nitrate deposits, and shallow ponds or lagoons, which furnish an extensive and important industry. The deeper mineral wealth of some parts of the region is very remarkable. Over a large part of the western portion of the Atacama Desert there is practically no rainfall, even for years at a time, and there is no vegetation. Rain is more abundant towards the east, and the oases of low herbage supply fodder for the llamas and other animals. The Atacama problem, as involving the boundary between Chile, Bolivia, and the Argentine Republic, still remains a matter of discussion between the three nations.

Atacames, â-tâ-kâ'mâs, a small seaport town of Ecuador, 15 miles SW. of Emmeraldas. Lat.  $0^{\circ} 57' N.$

At'ahmam (or At'tenham) River, a considerable affluent of the Yakima River, in the SE. of Washington.

Ataki, â-tâ'kee, a town of Bessarabia, Russia, on the Dniester, opposite Mohilev. Pop. about 6000.

Atakpame, â-tâk-pâ'mâ, a government- and mission-station of the "Hinterland" of Togoland, in German western Africa. It has an extensive rubber-trade. Pop. about 10,000.

Atalanti, a village and gulf in Greece. See TALANTI.

Atalaya, â-tâ-lî'â, a town of the island of Gran Canaria, near Las Palmas, the habitations of which are excavated in regular terraces on the side of San Antonio Mountain.

Atalaya, â-tâ-lî'â, a town of Brazil, state and 15 miles WNW. of Alagoas.

At'alis'sa, a post-village of Muscatine co., Iowa, on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 34 miles W. of Davenport. Pop. about 400.

Atalla, a town of Alabama. See ATTALLA.

Atami, â-tâ'mee, a seaside resort of Japan, on the Sea of Sagami, about 40 miles SW. of Yokohama.

Atasco'sa, a county in the S. part of Texas, has an area of 1182 sq. m. It is intersected by the Atascosa River, and the San Miguel River crosses its SW. portion. Capital, Pleasanton. Pop. in 1890, 6459; in 1900, 7143.

Atascosa, a post-hamlet of Bexar co., Tex., 18 miles SW. of San Antonio.

Atascosa River rises in the S. part of Texas, runs southeastward through Atascosa co., and enters the Rio Frio 3 or 4 miles from its mouth. Length, about 100 miles.

Atawai, â-tôw-i', or Tauai, tôw-i', also written Atui, one of the Hawaiian Islands. See KAUAI.

Ataun, â-tôwn', a decayed town of Spain, province of Guipúzcoa, 8 miles SSW. of Tolosa.

Atbara, ât-bâ-râ, a territory of Nubia, sometimes called the island of Meroë, it being partially insulated by the river Atbara on the NE., the Bahr-el-Asrek on the W. and SW., and the Nile on the NW.

Atbara (anc. Atab'oras), a river of northeastern Africa, the last tributary of the Nile, rises in Abyssinia near Lake Dembea (Taana) and flows in a NNW. direction. It receives a large affluent, the Takazze (known as Setit in its lower course), traverses southern Nubia, and enters the Nile at Ed Damer, just above Berber, in lat.  $17^{\circ} 50' N.$  The stream, although containing a copious supply of water during the rainy season, is practically non-navigable, and loses itself before reaching the Nile during the dry months. Its lower course is regulated by dams.

Atbasar, ât-bâ-zâr, a town of Asiatic Russia, in a district of its own name, 147 miles W. of Akmolinsk, on the Ishim River. Pop. in 1897, 3034.

Atcha, an Aleutian island. See ATKA.

Atchafalaya (atch-af-â-lî'â) River, La., is an outlet of the Red River or of the Mississippi. It originates at the N. end of Point Coupée parish, where the Red River enters the Mississippi. It runs generally southward to Chetumaches Lake, from the south end of which it issues and enters the Gulf of Mexico (Atchafalaya Bay) at the SE. extremity of St. Mary's parish. Length, about 220 miles, the greater part of which is navigable by steamboats. In times of inundation part of the water of the Mississippi is discharged through this channel. It is believed that this bayou was once a main arm of the Red River.

Atchak, or Atcham, an Aleutian island. See ATKA.

Atchin, or Atcheen, Sumatra. See ACHIN.

Atchinsk, Атчинск, a town of Siberia, government of Yeniseisk, 75 miles W. of Krasnoyarsk, on the Tobolim, and on the Siberian railway. Pop. in 1897, 6714.

Atchinsk, a town of Russia, government of Perm, and in the vicinity of the city of that name.

Atchison, a county in the NE. part of Kansas, has an area of 415 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by the Missouri River, and is intercepted by Grasshopper or Delaware Creek. Capital, Atchison. Pop. in 1890, 26,758; in 1900, 28,606.

Atchison, a county forming the NW. extremity of Missouri, has an area of 532 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by the Nodaway and on the W. by the Missouri River, and is intersected by the Nishnabotona and Tarkio Rivers. Capital, Rockport. Pop. in 1890, 15,533; in 1900, 16,501.

Atchison, a city of Kansas, an important railway centre, and the capital of Atchison co., is pleasantly situated on the right bank of the Missouri River, 35 miles above Leavenworth (21 miles by rail) and 35 miles below St. Joseph. It is at an elevation of 800 feet above the sea-level. Lat. 39° 34' N.; lon. 95° 10' W. Mean annual temperature, 59°. It is on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, the Missouri Pacific, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, and several other railroads converging at this point. It is the supply-centre for a large part of the state, receiving and distributing a prodigious quantity of freight. Grain, flour, lumber, and live-stock are shipped extensively. Atchison is the fifth city of the state in population. It has several collegiate institutions (Midland College, St. Benedict's College, St. Scholastica's Academy), flouring-mills, machine-shops, foundries, railroad-shops, and manufactures of lumber, furniture, carriages, etc. A fine iron bridge across the river connects the city with several railroads which terminate on the eastern bank. A state soldiers' orphans' home is located here. Pop. in 1870, 7054; in 1880, 15,105; in 1890, 13,963; in 1900, 15,722.

Atchu, an island of the Pacific. See ATKA.

Atchuyev, Атчуевъ, a small port in Russia, on the Sea of Azov, about 50 miles NW. of Yekaterinodar.

At'co, a post-village of Camden co., N.J., on the West Jersey and Seashore R., 19 miles SE. of Camden. It has manufactures of glass and nautical instruments. The banking point is Haddonfield or Camden. Pop. about 650.

Atco, a post-village of Wayne co., Pa., 10 miles NE. of Honesdale. Pop. about 125.

Ateca, А-та-ка, a town of Spain, in Aragon, 5 miles W. by S. of Calatayud, on the Jalón. Pop. of commune, 3000.

Ategerat, А-те-гер-ат, a town of Abyssinia, in Tigré, 65 miles NNW. of Antalo.

Atessa, А-те-са, a town of Italy, province of Chieti, 12 miles WSW. of Vasto. Pop. 4000 (commune, 10,000).

Ateste, the ancient name of Ezer.

Atfeh, А-те-ф, or Atfieh, А-те-ф-е-х, a town of Egypt, on the right bank of the Nile, 40 miles by rail S. of Cairo, supposed to be near the site of the anc. Aphroditopolis.

Atfeh, a village of Lower Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile, at the mouth of the Mahmudiyeh Canal, 88 miles by rail NNW. of Cairo.

At'glen, a post-borough of Chester co., Pa., in Chester Valley, on the Pennsylvania R., 47 miles W. of Philadelphia. It was formerly called Penningtonville. Pop. in 1900, 404.

Ath, or Aanth, Ат, a manufacturing town of Belgium, province of Hainaut, on the Dender, 20 miles E. by S. of Tournay. It has manufactures of textiles, etc. Pop. in 1900, 11,100.

Ath'abas'ca, or Lake of the Hills, a lake of the district of Athabasca, Canada, 180 miles SE. of Great Slave Lake. Lat. 59° N.; lon. 106° 30'–111° 30' W. It is situated at an elevation of 690 feet above the sea, and is 195 miles long by 5–35 miles in width, and covers an area of 2850 sq. m. Near its SW. extremity it receives the Athabasca River. It discharges its waters northward by Great Slave River, communicating through Great Slave Lake and Mackenzie River with the Polar Sea. The shores of the Athabasca to the northward are high arenitic rock; those to the southeastward are largely barren sandy hills perfectly divested of vegetable growth. Near the lake are mission settlements.

Athabasca, or Big Athabasca, a river of the Northwest Territories, Canada, draws its waters from the region of the Rocky Mountains near Mount Brown, and also from a height, called the Miette (ме-тте), not far from the Leather or Yellow Head Pass. Length, about 780 miles, a large part of which is navigable, and, below Fort McMurray, by steamboats drawing 7 and 8 feet of water. Stormy rapids intercept the course in some parts. The river is often, from its general northerly direction, assumed to be the main upper-water of the Mackenzie, although it is surpassed by the Peace River in length. Athabasca Landing is an important station on its banks. The river flows into the SW. extremity of Athabasca Lake.

Athabasca, a district of the Northwest Territories, Canada, between 55° and 60° N. lat. and 100° and 120° W. lon. It is bounded W. by British Columbia. Area, 251,300 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 6615. The district, which contains Athabasca Lake, and is watered by the rivers discharging into and flowing from it (Peace, Athabasca, Great Slave) and by Churchill River and its tributaries, is in greater part an undulating plain, rising up in low mountains (Birch Mountains) to elevations of 2000–2300 feet. The surface is largely marshy. The chief settlement is Dunvegan.

Athabasca Mount, a summit of the Canadian Rocky Mountains, in about lat. 52° 10' N. Elevation, 11,900 feet.

Athabasca Pass, in the Rocky Mountains of Canada, on the borders of Alberta and British Columbia, and between Mounts Brown and Hooker. Height above the sea, 7250 feet.

Athe'na, a banking post-town of Umatilla co., Oregon, on two railroads, 42 miles S. by W. of Walls Walla. It is a shipping point for wheat, barley, and other farm produce. Pop. in 1900, 703.

Athenia, a post-village of Passaic co., N.J., on the Erie and the Lackawanna R., 5 miles (direct) NW. of Passaic, its banking point. Pop. about 250.

Athens, ath'ens (anc. Ath'e'na; Gr. Ἀθῆναι, pronounced by the modern Greeks А-те-е-на), the capital of Greece and of the nome of Attica. Lat. (observatory) 37° 58' 20" N.; lon. 23° 43' E.; elevation, about 260–340 feet. Its site, magnificent for scenery, is about 4 miles NE. of the Gulf of Egina, in an extensive plain, watered by the Ilissus and Cephissus, and surrounded by hills on all sides, except towards the sea, where it gives a fine view of the gulf and numerous islands. This plain is broken by ridges of limestone, several of which, with their intervening valleys, are partly occupied by the city; while the highest of them rises precipitously and forms the Acropolis or citadel. The chief approaches to Athens are one on the W., by way of Eleusis, over a well-made carriage road, now known as the "Sacred Way," in a plain remarkable for the luxuriant beauty of its oleanders; and another on the SW., by the harbor of Piræus, along a tract which, once a mere swamp, is covered with vineyards and olive and fig plantations. A railway extends from Athens to its port, the Piræus, constructed along one of the famous "long walls," built in the middle of the fifth century B.C. The road from Marathon enters the city on the east. The Athens-Corinth railway (57 miles) touches the city on the NW., and a tram-line unites it with the Bay of Phaleron on the SW. In its most prosperous days Athens enclosed a large space, including not only the city proper, but also a long, narrow suburb, stretching continuously to the port of Piræus, and was surrounded by walls which had a circuit of nearly 20 miles. Parts of these walls still remain, particularly on the S. and W. Athens had originally two other ports, Munychia and Zea, and the harbor of Phaleron was at one time more important than either of these; but as the Piræus became the seat of commerce their importance declined.

The Acropolis, or ancient centre of Athens, on which most of its noblest monuments are placed, is an isolated, rocky height, rising precipitously about 200 feet above the adjacent plain. Its summit was enclosed by walls 2330 yards in circuit, considerable portions of which, together with some of the indicated gates, still remain. The modern city is built mostly on its N. and E. sides, covering the depression that extends between it and Mount Lycabettus (Mount St. George). The Athens of to-day, which is the successor to the wretched capital which in 1834 had dwindled down to a population centred in about 300 houses, is largely the creation of the German architect Schaubert, and is one of the most attractive cities of the Levant, with regularly laid-out streets and boulevards, squares and plazas, and a number of imposing edifices. Hermes Street and Æolus Street, the former terminating in the attractive Constitution Square, are among the chief arteries of traffic. Most of the public buildings are in the Neapolis or modern quarter. The royal palace, which lies off the SW. foot of Mount Lycabettus, is a large and imposing building of Pentellic marble, and was erected in 1834-38, after the designs of the German architect Gärtner. Among the other buildings and institutions of note are the national university (founded in 1837), which has about 60 professors and 3000 students of all classes, and a library of 250,000 volumes, which is at the same time the national library; the academy of science, polytechnic institute (containing the collections of the Archaeological Society), the national museum with its imposing collection of antiquities and restorations, etc. Athens is the seat of American, British, and French schools of classical studies and research.

Foremost among the antiquities of Athens, crowning the Acropolis, or ancient citadel, is the Parthenon, an edifice of white marble, 228 feet in length, 101 feet in width, and having an outer framework of 46 Doric columns (about 34 feet high). The building, with its plastic ornamentations (presumably by Phidias, dates from the time of Pericles, and is considered to be the most beautiful monument of ancient architecture. The structure is now in a ruinous condition. Other edifices, all of them noted for their superb exhibition of Greek art, are the Erechtheum, which contained the shrines of Athena and of other deities, having a magnificent portico of Caryatides; the temple of Athena Nike, known also as the temple of the Wingless Victory; the Theseum, the best preserved edifice of all ancient Greece; the imposing winged gateway, known as the Propylæa, the monumental portal to the inner precincts of the Acropolis; the theatre of Dionysus; and the theatre or Odeon of Herodes Atticus, the most imposing of the ruins lying at the foot of the Acropolis. Other interesting points are the Areopagus, or Mars' Hill, the meeting-place of the venerable court of the Areopagus; the Pnyx, where popular meetings were held; the Eleusinium; the so-called Prison of Socrates; the Tower of the Winds; the Grotto of Apollo and Pan; and the extensive Roman baths. Outside of the city, just beyond the Arch of Hadrian, 16 Corinthian columns, 56½ feet in height, on a raised platform, remain of the temple of Jupiter Olympius. The vast Stadium, or race-course, near the Ilissus, is now (1905) being restored in magnificent style, the material used being Pentellic marble. Pop. in 1879, 63,374; in 1884, 84,903; in 1896, 111,486.

Athens was named in honor of Minerva (in Gr. Ἀθήνα, Athēne), who was regarded as the tutelary goddess of the city. At the dawn of authentic Greek history it appears as the head of a little state with republican institutions. The territory over which it ruled was called Attica. At the beginning of the sixth century B.C., Solon drew up a code of laws for Athens. In 490 B.C. the Athenians repelled a Persian invasion. Athens took a leading part in resisting the great onslaught of Xerxes (480-479 B.C.). Soon after Athens attained to the hegemony among the Grecian states, and about 450 B.C. reached the height of its power and splendor under Pericles. The age of Pericles was the golden age of Athenian art. This period and the century that followed witnessed that extraordinary blossoming of letters and philosophy which won for Athens a unique position in the history of the world's intellectual activity. For centuries the city continued a great centre of learning. The power of Athens succumbed to that of its rival Sparta at the close of the fifth century B.C. In 338 B.C., Macedonia imposed its yoke upon Greece. In 146 B.C., Athens passed with the rest of Greece under the sway of Rome. The city flourished under the Romans, and was a great resort of Roman students. After the division of the Roman Empire in A.D. 395, it formed part of the Byzantine Empire. From the beginning of the thirteenth century it was the seat of a Latin duchy, which was extinguished by the Turks in 1456. The Acropolis fell into the hands of the Greek patriots in 1822, and in 1826-27 was besieged and taken by the Turks. In 1834, Athens became the seat of the Greek government.

Athens, a county in the SE. part of Ohio, borders on West Virginia. Area, 528 sq. m. It is intersected by the Hocking River, which enters the Ohio River in this county, and is drained by Shade River and Federal and Sunday Creeks. Many mines of good bituminous coal have been opened in this county, which also has limestone and iron. Capital, Athens. Pop. in 1890, 35,194; in 1900, 38,730.

It is the seat of the Ohio University, founded by the state in 1809, and of a state hospital for the insane. It has manufactures of furniture, bricks, etc. Coal-mines and ancient Indian mounds are found in the vicinity. Pop. in 1890, 2650; in 1900, 3666.

Athens, a banking post-borough of Bradford co., Pa., is on the right bank of the Susquehanna, 2 miles above the mouth of the Chemung, and on the Lehigh Valley R., 15 miles N. of Towanda. It has manufactures of furniture, iron bridges, carriages, etc. Pop. in 1900, 3749.

Athens, a township of Bradford co., Pa. Pop. in 1900, 1556.

Athens, a township of Crawford co., Pa. Pop. in 1900, 1106.

Athens, a post-town of Greenville co., S.C. Pop. in 1900, 107.

Athens, a banking post-village, capital of McMinn co., Tenn., on the Southern and the Tellico Rs., 55 miles SW. of Knoxville and 56 miles NE. of Chattanooga. It has various mills and manufactures. Here is the U. S. Grant University. Pop. in 1900, 1849.

Athens, a banking post-town, capital of Henderson co., Tex., on the St. Louis Southwestern and the Texas and New Orleans Rs., about 190 miles NNE. of Austin and 36 miles NNW. of Palestine. It has brick- and tile-works, potteries, cotton-gins, cotton-seed oil mills, etc. Pop. about 1300.

Athens, a post-township (town) of Windham co., Vt., about 18 miles N. of Brattleboro. Pop. in 1900, 180.

Athens, a post-village of Mercer co., W.Va., 6 miles N. by E. of Princeton. Pop. about 150.

Athens, a banking post-village of central Wisconsin, in Marathon co., and on the Abbotsford and Northeastern R.

Athens, a banking post-village of Leeds co., Ontario, situated W. of Brockville, on the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie R. It has saw- and flour-mills, tile-factories, etc. Pop. in 1901, 953.

Athensville, a post-village of Greene co., Ill., about 40 miles SW. of Springfield.

Ath'erley, a post-village of Ontario co., Ontario, on Lake Simcoe, with a station on the Northern R. (Muskoka branch), 3 miles from Orillia. It contains various mills.

Ath'erstone, a small town of England, co. of Warwick, 7 miles SE. of Tamworth.

Ath'erton, a manufacturing and mining town of England, in Lancashire, 4 miles SSW. of Bolton. Pop. in 1901, 16,211.

Atherton, a post-village of Vigo co., Ind., on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois R., 10½ miles N. of Terre Haute.

Atherton, a post-village of Jackson co., Mo. Pop. about 90.

Atherton, a post-hamlet of Licking co., Ohio.

Athertonville, a post-village of Larue co., Ky., 10 miles W. of New Haven, its railroad station and banking point. Pop. about 400.

Athesis, the Roman name of the Adriax.

Athis, à'tee', a small town of France, department of Orne, arrondissement of Domfront.

Ath'league, a parish and village of Ireland, in Connaught, cos. of Roscommon and Galway.

Athlegar, an ancient name of ATHY.

Athlone, ath-lōne' (Athluan, "ford of the moon"), a town of Ireland, on both sides of the Shannon, cos. of Westmeath and Roscommon, 76 miles by rail W. of Dublin. The castle of Athlone, erected in the reign of King John and enlarged and strengthened in that of Queen Elizabeth, is now strongly fortified in the modern style. The barracks can accommodate 2000 men. The town has active manufactures and trade. Pop. about 7000.

Athol, Athole, or Atholl, à'thol, a district of Scotland, in the N. part of Perthshire. It gives the title of duke to the head of the Murray family.

Athol, a post-village of Kootenai co., Idaho, on the Northern Pacific R., 37 miles (direct) NE. of Spokane, Wash., its banking point. Pop. about 275.

Athol, a post-village of Smith co., Kan., on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 6 miles (direct) W. of Smith Center. Pop. about 125.

Athol, formerly Atch Depot, a banking post-village and township (town) of Worcester co., Mass., on Miller's River and on the Boston and Albany and the Fitchburg Rs., 33 miles W. of Fitchburg. It has manufactures of boots, shoes, woollen cloth, sash and blinds, silk, pocket-books, furniture, meat-choppers, etc. It is about 1 mile from Athol Center. Pop. of the town in 1900, 7061.

Athol, a post-village of Warren co., N.Y., about 62 miles N. of Albany and 2 miles W. of the Hudson River. Pop. about 200.

Athol, a post-village of Berks co., Pa., near Douglassville. Pop. about 350.

Athol, a post-village of Spink co., S.Dak., on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 10 miles (direct) N. by W. of Redfield, its banking point. Pop. about 250.

Athol, a village on the Intercolonial R., in Cumberland co., Nova Scotia, 12 miles from Amherst.

Athol Center, a post-village of Worcester co., Mass., in Athol township (town), on Miller's River and on the Fitchburg R., 32 miles W. of Fitchburg. It has various manufactures. Pop. about 2200.

Ath'os (called by the modern Greeks the Holy Mountain), a mountain of Turkey, at the extremity of the easternmost of the three prongs of the Peninsula of Chalcidice, 80 miles SE. of Saloniki, about 6350 feet in elevation. The flanks of this mountain are occupied by several villages and about 20 convents, besides numberless chapels, cells, and grottoes, which serve as the habitation of several thousand monks; those called hermits live in caves. In the Middle Ages Athos was a great centre of Greek theology and learning, and here are preserved remains of famous libraries which have furnished to learned Europe the MSS. of many masterpieces of ancient Greek literature. The monks enjoy almost complete autonomy under the Turkish government. Vestiges of the canal cut by Xerxes to avoid the dangers of circumnavigating the promontory have been discovered.

Athy, ath-' (anc. Athlegar, the "western ford"), a town of Ireland, co. of Kildare, on the Barrow, 39 miles by rail SW. of Dublin. Pop. about 4900.

Atibaina, à-te-bi'á, a town of Brazil, state of São Paulo, on a river of its own name, 110 miles SSE. of Santos.

Atienza, à-te-én'thà, a town of Spain, province of Guadalajara, 48 miles SW. of Soria. Pop. of commune, 2000.

Atimonán, à-te-mo-nán', a pueblo of Lazon, Philippine Islands, on Lamon Bay, province and 19 miles (direct) E. of Tayabas. The region is mountainous and wooded. The pueblo has a telegraph office. Pop. 10,000.

Atina, à-tee'nà, an ancient town of Italy, province of Caserta, 11 miles SE. of Sora, near the Melfa. Pop. about 2000 (commune, 4500). Another ancient Atina is the present town of ATENA.

Atitlán, à-tee-tlán', a lake, town, and volcano of Guatemala, about 50 miles W. of the city of Guatemala. The lake is 24 miles in length from E. to W., by 10 miles in breadth, very deep, and surrounded by lofty mountains. The town (Santiago de Atitlán) is on its S. side. Pop. about 9000, largely engaged in cotton industries. Elevation of the volcano of Atitlán, about 12,000 feet.

Atiu, or Vatuu, one of the Cook Islands, in the South Pacific, belonging to New Zealand. Pop. about 950.

Atjeh, Sumatra. See ACRIN.

At'ka, or Atcha, à't'hà, written also Atchu, Atcham, Atchak, or Askha, one of the Aleutian Islands, of the Andreonovian group, lon. 175° W., about 50 miles long by 10 miles broad. At its E. point is a harbor, near which are a volcano and a hot spring. Highest point, 4988 feet.

Atkarsk, à't'karsk', a town of Russia, 50 miles NW. of Saratov, on the Atkara River. Pop. in 1897, 9750.

Atkins, a banking post-town of Pope co., Ark., on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern R., 64 miles NW. of Little Rock. It has flour-mills, carriage-factory, etc. Cotton is grown and shipped here. Pop. in 1900, 745.

Atkins, a post-village of Benton co., Iowa, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 23 miles (direct) NE. of Belle Plaine. Pop. 125.

Atkins, a post-village of St. Clair co., Mich., 14 miles by rail NW. of Port Huron.

Atkins, a post-hamlet of Smyth co., Va. Pop. about 55.

Atkinson, a banking post-village of Henry co., Ill., on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 30 miles E. of Rock Island. It has brick- and tile-works, etc. Pop. in 1900, 762.

Atkinson, a post-village of Benton co., Ind., on the Wabash R., 23 miles W. of Lafayette. Pop. 260.

Atkinson, a post-township (town) of Piscataquis co., Me., about 32 miles NNW. of Bangor. Pop. in 1900, 495.

Atkinson, a post-village of Iron co., Mich., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 12 miles (direct) NW. of Crystal Falls. Pop. about 200.

Atkinson, a banking post-town of Holt co., Neb., on the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley R., 58 miles NW. of Neligh. Pop. in 1900, 595.

Atkinson, a post-township (town) of Rockingham co., N.H., about 20 miles SE. of Manchester. Pop. in 1900, 442.

Atkinson Depot, a post-hamlet of Rockingham co., N.H., in Atkinson township (town), on the Boston and Maine R., 4 miles NNW. of Haverhill, Mass.

Atkinson Mills, a post-hamlet of Mifflin co., Pa., about 23 miles SW. of Lewistown.

Atkinsonville, a post-hamlet of Owen co., Ind., about 32 miles E. by S. of Terre Haute.

Atlan'ta, a post-village of Columbia co., Ark., about 45 miles SSW. of Camden.

Atlanta, a post-village of San Joaquin co., Cal., 5 miles from Ripon.

Atlanta, at-lan'ta, a city, capital of Georgia, and seat of justice of Fulton co., is situated on an elevated ridge dividing the waters of the Chattahoochee River from the rivers that flow into the Atlantic, at an altitude of 1050 feet above the level of the sea. It has a remarkably healthy and equable climate, the mean annual temperature being about 66° Fahrenheit, with a cool and salubrious atmosphere. Lat. 33° 44' N.; lon. 84° 30' W. It is 7 miles SE. of the Chattahoochee River. Several railroads (Atlanta and West Point, the Seaboard Air Line, the Southern, etc.) converge at Atlanta, mostly trunk lines, and leading from such important cities as Augusta, 171 miles distant; Knoxville, Tenn.; Savannah, etc. Atlanta has an extensive and rapidly increasing trade, particularly in cotton, dry goods, and horses and mules; the tobacco trade is the largest south of Richmond.

There are several hundred industrial establishments, prominent among which are manufactories of furniture, street-cars, paper, cotton goods, agricultural implements, etc.; there are extensive foundries and machine-shops, and lumber- and planing-mills. Upward of 40 newspapers are published here. Atlanta is laid out in the form of a circle, with a diameter of 3½ miles, and with the Union Depot at the centre. The chief public buildings are the custom-house, state capitol, containing a library of over 50,000 volumes, opera-house, court-house, city-hall, and chamber of commerce. Atlanta has an excellent system of public schools, and contains numerous educational institutions of a high order for both white and colored students, foremost among which are the Atlanta University; Clark University, connected with which are Gammon Theological Seminary and normal and industrial departments; Georgia School of Technology, medical colleges, etc.

Atlanta was settled in 1840; was incorporated as the village of Marthasville in 1842, as Atlanta in 1847. Pop. in 1850, 2572; in 1860, 9544; in 1870, 21,879; in 1880, 37,409; in 1890, 65,533; in 1900, 89,872. It was entered by the Union troops under General Sherman, Sept. 2, 1864, after a siege of several weeks. He destroyed the business portion of the city on leaving it in the following November. Important expositions were held here in 1881 and 1895. South of the city are the large McPherson Barracks.

Atlanta, a post-village of Elmore co., Idaho, about 60 miles ENE. of Boise. Gold has been found here.

Atlanta, a banking city of Logan co., Ill., on the Chicago and Alton R., 20 miles SW. of Bloomington. It is situated on a high and fertile prairie. Coal is mined here. Pop. in 1900, 1270.

Atlanta, a banking post-town of Hamilton co., Ind., 12 miles N. of Noblesville, on the Lake Erie and Western R. Pop. in 1900, 1000.

Atlanta, a post-village of Cowley co., Kan., 20 miles by rail NE. of Winfield. Pop. 200.

Atlanta, a post-hamlet of Winn parish, La.

Atlanta, a post-village, capital of Montmorency co., Mich., 25 miles (direct) E. of Gaylord, its banking point. Pop. in 1900, 113.

Atlanta, a post-village of Chickasaw co., Miss. Pop. about 100.

Atlanta, a banking post-village of Macon co., Mo., 11 miles by rail N. of Macon City. Pop. 500.

Atlanta, a post-village of Phelps co., Neb., 7 miles by rail SW. of Holdrege.

Atlanta, a post-village of Stoupen co., N.Y., 28 miles (direct) SW. of Canandaigua, on the Lackawanna R. Pop. about 500.

Atlanta, a post-village of Pickaway co., Ohio, on the Muskingum Valley R., 91 miles NE. of Cincinnati.

Atlanta, a banking city of Cass co., Tex., on the Texas and Pacific and the Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana Rs., 27 miles N. of Jefferson and 31 miles S. by W. of Texarkana. It has cotton and canning industries. Pop. in 1900, 1301.

Atlan'tic, a county in the SSE. part of New Jersey, has an area of 567 sq. m. It is bounded on the NE. by Little Egg Harbor River and on the SE. by the Atlantic Ocean, and is intersected by Great Egg Harbor River. Cranberries, potatoes, wheat, hay, the small fruits (blackberries, strawberries, grapes), and wine are staple products. Capital, May's Landing. Pop. in 1890, 28,836; in 1900, 46,492.

Atlantic, a banking city, capital of Cass co., Iowa, on the East Nishnabotona River and on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 82 miles W. by S. of Des Moines. It has a canning-factory, iron-works, and manufactures of drugs. It is the trade-centre of an extensive agricultural region. Pop. in 1900, 5046.

Atlantic, a post-village and summer-resort of Hancock co., Me., on Swan Island, 35 miles S. of Ellsworth, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Atlantic, Norfolk co., Mass. See QUINCY.

Atlantic, a sea-side resort and station of Suffolk co., Mass., 5 miles NE. of Boston.

Atlantic, a township of Monmouth co., N.J. Pop. in 1900, 1410.

Atlantic, a post-hamlet of Carteret co., N.O.

Atlantic, a post-village of Crawford co., Pa., on the Erie R., 19 miles SW. of Meadville.

Atlantic, a sea-side post-village of Accomac co., Va., 11 miles from Stockton, Md.

Atlantic City, a city and pleasure- and health-resort of Atlantic co., N.J., 60 miles SE. of Philadelphia and on the Atlantic Ocean, is on a narrow sandy island called Absecon Beach, extending from Great Egg Harbor Inlet on the SW. to Absecon Inlet on the NE. It is the SE. terminus of the West Jersey and Seashore and the Atlantic City Rs. The island is about 10 miles long, ½ of a mile wide, and 4 to 5 miles from the mainland. The beach is one of the finest on the Atlantic coast of the United States, and (together with its proximity to Philadelphia and accessibility from New York) has made the city the most popular sea-side or bathing-resort of the country. Upward of 100,000 people have bathed here in the course of a single day. Atlantic City has hundreds of hotels and boarding-houses, some of the former huge caravansaries, giving accommodation to an almost constant tide of travel during the summer season. During recent years the city has also become a favorite winter- and early spring-resort. There are numerous retail-business houses, and the city is well provided with banks and newspapers. Absecon light-house, at the northern end of the island, is 160 feet high. Atlantic City is connected by electric cars with South Atlantic City and Longport. It was incorporated in 1864. Permanent population in 1870, 1043; in 1880, 5477; in 1890, 13,055; in 1900, 27,838.

Atlantic City, a village of Norfolk co., Va., on Tanner's Creek, 1 mile N. of Norfolk.

Atlantic City, a post-village of Fremont co., Wyo., is on the NE. slope of the Rocky Mountains, near the South Pass. Gold is found near this place.

Atlan'tic High'lands, a banking post-borough of Monmouth co., N.J., on Sandy Hook Bay, 40 miles by rail, and 20 miles (direct) S. of New York city, with which it is also connected by steamboat. It is a summer-resort. It lies at the foot of the Navesink Highlands, which are frequently the first land seen by the transatlantic steamers arriving at the port of New York. Pop. in 1900, 1383.

Atlantic Mine, a mining post-village of Houghton co., Mich., 5 miles from Houghton. It has copper-mines. Pop. about 1600. The banking point is Houghton.

Atlantic Ocean, one of the main divisions of the earth's hydrosphere, the great body of water that separates America on the W. from Europe and Africa on the E., and unites with the Arctic basin on the N. and the Antarctic on the S. No precise limits can be assigned to this sea on the north and south, and, therefore, the length and area covered by it are variously stated by geographers. If extended to the Arctic and Antarctic Circles the length of the basin would be approximately 9000 miles, and its area, as computed by some German geographers, roughly 33,000,000 sq. m. Its greatest width, measured on the line uniting the Sahara with the Gulf of Mexico, is about 5400 miles. The Atlantic is remarkable for the number and extent of the inland seas that communicate with it, such as the Baltic, Mediterranean, Gulf of Mexico, and Hudson Bay; the Gulf of Mexico and the Mediterranean having depths of truly oceanic character. The greatest depth that has thus far been determined in the Atlantic basin is 27,360 feet, the Porto Rico Deep, in lat. 19° 39' N., lon. 66° 26' W. A somewhat less marked depth is found in the southern division, W. of the Gulf of Guinea, in lat. 11° S. and lon. 18° 6' W. (24,173 ft.). The average depth of the sea may perhaps be assumed to be somewhat more than 12,000 ft., or 1000 ft. less than that of the Pacific.

The main portion of the Atlantic basin is divided longitudinally by an uprising ridge, which differentiates an eastern from a western trough, and largely conforms in trend with that of the sea itself. This dividing ridge, which in its northern part is known as the Dolphin ridge and in the southern as the Challenger ridge, brings up the floor of the sea to within 9000-10,000 feet of the surface, whereas the depressions on either side sink rapidly to 12,000-15,000 or 17,000 feet and more. On this ridge are situated the islands of the Azores group, St. Paul, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha. What the precise nature of this dividing ridge is, whether it represents (as has been assumed by some) a subsided mountain-chain or not, or a sunken continent of which the ridge is a part, still remains to be determined. It is, however, interesting to note that the elevations that are on it and come to the surface, the islands that have already been noted, are fundamentally of igneous or volcanic nature, thus recalling in their construction and position the dominating peaks of the South American Andes. The waters of the Atlantic Ocean are somewhat more saline than those of the other oceans, the average salinity being about 35.5 parts in 1000, with the range increasing to 37.5 parts in some portions of the surface covered by the trade-winds. The surface temperature, as in other oceans, is measured largely by the temperature of the air above it, and is therefore latitudinal in its variation, falling towards the freezing-point in the high north and south, and touching a maximum in approaching the equatorial or tropical regions. In the Gulf of Mexico the temperature ranges to 84° and in the Gulf of Guinea to 82°. Off the coast of Newfoundland, where the same area is occupied alternately by the cold waters of the Labrador Current and the warmer waters coming from the tropics, there is, according to Murray, a variation in the surface temperature of 53°, a condition that is again repeated off the coast of Japan. Below a depth of about 50 fathoms (300 feet) the temperature at any one place seemingly does not vary seasonally by more than 2°, but different areas or sections of the ocean have widely differing temperatures for the same depth. Thus, while the temperature of the sea off equatorial Brazil is, at a depth of about 1300 feet, 48°, that of the Sargasso Sea, at an equivalent depth, is 61°; again, the cold waters in the polar regions come quite to the surface. As in the other oceans, there is a rapid decline of temperature from the surface to about 400 fathoms, when the fall is more gradual, and on the floor of the sea the temperature is wholly independent of latitude. A minimum temperature of 32° (in a very few places, somewhat lower), the temperature of freezing of fresh water, is found in the greatest depths, and almost the same temperature (35°) is continued to the trough of the equator.

The principal currents of the Atlantic, which are in the main determined by the character of the constant winds, are the North and South Equatorial Currents, the Gulf Stream, and the Labrador Current. The equatorial currents flow westward from the African coast with a velocity of from 30 to 70 miles a day, and are deflected in northerly and southerly lines by the Brazilian projection of the South American continent. One of these deflected branches traverses the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, and issues through the Florida Strait to form part of the Gulf Stream. This stream, joined by that branch of the equatorial current which runs northward of Cuba, follows the coast of the United States, gradually expanding in volume and decreasing in velocity. (See GULF STREAM.) Turning eastward, it crosses the Atlantic to about the position of the Azores, where it is again deflected southward towards the tropical parts of Africa. The Gulf Stream is distinguished from the other parts of the ocean by its higher temperature and blue color. It is mainly the "drift" from the Gulf Stream that reaches the British Isles and the Norwegian coast, the elevated temperature of which, formerly assigned directly to the influence of the heated Gulf Stream, is primarily due to the inflowing of prevailing western winds, which carry with them a high measure of heat derived from the thermometric condition of the waters generally. The Labrador Current gives to the north Atlantic basin its supply of icebergs, which are in nearly all cases detached fragments of Greenland glaciers. Icebergs rarely travel further south than the 42d parallel of latitude.

The floor of the Atlantic basin is covered with a series of organic and inorganic deposits, the former mainly composed of the hard parts or tests of the group of lowly organisms known as the Foraminifera, continuing to a depth of about 15,000 feet, where they are replaced by a distinctive "red-clay," a combination seemingly of material of meteoric origin and of that resulting from the disintegration of volcanic products (pumice, scoriae, ash). The foraminiferal deposit, which is already well marked at a depth of 500 feet, forms largely a white or greyish ooze, which, from the marked prevalence of the foraminiferal type known as Globigerina, is now generally designated the Globigerina ooze. It is also known as Atlantic ooze.

Little is known regarding the age or geological history of the Atlantic basin. It shares the obscurity which attaches to the history of the other oceanic basins. It may or may not be a subsided tract of the earth's general mass, or it may be part of a primal downward fold which was initiated at the time of the outlining of the continents. There is reason to believe, as has been so forcibly suggested by Suess, that the north and south basins may have been formed at widely differing periods, and that neither one nor the other is necessarily older than the late Cretaceous or Tertiary period. It is, however, certain that a central oceanic tract—a "Mediterranean" sea—existed long before, making continuous water from the European coast to the west coast of South America.

There is no reason to believe that the ancients had any definite or adequate idea of the extent of the Atlantic Ocean, though doubtless in very early times they were familiar with the existence of a great western sea, which—in order to distinguish it from the Mediterranean—the Greeks named Ἀτλαντικὴ θάλασσα (Atlantikē thalassa), or Ἀτλαντικὸν πέλαγος (Atlantikon pelagos), the "Atlantic sea," or the sea beyond Mount Atlas. Horace calls it (Lib. I. Ode 31) Atlanticum Æquor, the "Atlantic [watery] plain."

Atlanticville, or North Long Branch, a village of Monmouth co., N.J., on the sea-coast and on the Central R. of New Jersey (North Long Branch Station), 29 miles S. of New York and 2 miles N. of Long Branch. The post-office is North Long Branch.

Atlantida, At-lán-ti-dá, a department of Honduras, organized in 1902.

Atlas, a post-hamlet of Pike co., Ill., about 40 miles SSE. of Quincy.

Atlas, a post-village of Genesee co., Mich., 8 miles S. of Flint.

Atlas, a post-hamlet of Belmont co., Ohio, about 38 miles NNE. of Marietta.

Atlas, a post-village of Lamar co., Tex. Pop. about 75.

Atlas, a post-village of Pittsylvania co., Va. Pop. about 60.

Atlas, a post-hamlet of Polk co., Wis. Pop. about 60.

Atlas Mountains, a mountain-system in north Africa, the SW. extremity of which is near Cape Nun, in lat. 28° 46' N., on the Atlantic Ocean, and which, after traversing Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis, terminates on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, about lon. 11° E. The general course of these mountains is from WSW. to ENE. Except in the western half of Morocco, they form no continuous chains or definite ranges, but consist of a congeries of elevations, sometimes isolated and sometimes connected, with endless branches and offsets, irregularly diffused over nearly the whole NW. of Africa; in the mountain-system is included the vast series of plateaus or highlands, which, particularly in Algeria, constitutes perhaps the most marked relief of the land. This is the region of the upland Shotts, which, according to some geographers, mark the position of an ancient arm of the sea. The Atlas Mountains have been divided generally into two principal and parallel ranges, running nearly E. and W., the one called the Greater and the other the Lesser Atlas; the latter lying towards the Mediterranean, and the former adjoining the Sahara or Great Desert, from which it rises in places with great abruptness. There is, however, no strict correlation between the parts that are known as the Lesser and Greater Atlas in Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis, and the terms may be considered to be rather of a locally classificatory than geographical value,—indicating broadly northern and southern heights. In Morocco the most southerly series of elevations, which, as well as the Central or main Atlas, maintains a general range-construction with lofty crest-line, is known as the Anti-Atlas. It unites with the Central Atlas on the meridian of 4° W., near where the imposing peak of Jebel Ayashin, whose elevation is variously placed between 12,000 and 14,760 feet, dominates a virgating mountain-knot. Of the Central Atlas, the loftiest summit appears to be the Tizi-Tamjurt (14,500 ft.), about 50 miles S. by W. of the city of Morocco. Other lofty summits of the empire are the Tizi-Likumpt, 13,151 ft., and Miltsein, for a long time supposed to be the culminating point of the system, 11,430 ft. The main mountains send off various ramifications northward and northeastward, uniting with what is known as the Rif or coast-chain, which is tectonically the continuation of the Sierra Ronda of Spain broken across by the Strait of Gibraltar between the rock of Gibraltar and the Jebel Musa. This separation or disruption was effected during the Post-Pliocene period of geological time. In Algeria the so-called Lesser Atlas falls off in a series of steep escarpments to the Mediterranean, sometimes wholly of a plateau character. Elsewhere it constitutes properly defined ridges or mountain-knots, as the extremely rugged and picturesque Jurjura (with the Lalla Khadija or Khedrija, 7650 ft.) and the Great Babor (6463 ft.), marking respectively the lands of Great and Little Kabylia. The Algerian mountains bordering the Sahara, to whose level the crest-line occasionally falls, are generally called the Great Atlas, the best-known division of which is the Aurès, the Mons Aurasius of the ancients, culminating in the Chelliya (Shelliya), 7706 ft., as the loftiest summit of all Algeria. At the western termination of this division is the famous pass or "gateway" of El-Kantara, the passage of one of the most frequented caravan routes to the Sahara. The Atlas of Tunis terminates abruptly in the promontories of the east coast, but is structurally continued in the trough of the Mediterranean as part of the Alpe-Appennines system of Italy and Sicily. There are no glaciers in the Atlas Mountains, and only a few of the loftiest summits of Morocco appear to be perpetually covered with snow. Evidences of past glaciation have been noted in this part of the mountain-system. The Atlas Mountains are in some sections strikingly imposing in their scenic effects, towering cliffs and deep gorges (Chabet or El-Kerata) being a feature especially of the northern face in Algeria. Much of the heart of the region in Algeria has been made accessible by excellent military roads, but elsewhere penetration is still very difficult. The mountains are composed largely of crystalline rocks and schists in their deeper parts, with limestones of newer age (Cretaceous and Tertiary) occupying the flanks. The vegetation is a combination of European and African elements. On the S. the lower ranges are covered with date-palm trees; hence the name of a portion of this region, Beled-el-Jerid ("the land of dates"). Higher up, gum-trees, almonds, and olives abound, together with extensive growths of myrtle and cork-oak and river-thickets of oleander; on the table-lands the fruits of Europe are grown in great quantities. Higher still occur forests of immense pines; and in isolated areas, as on the Jurjura, a variety or closely related form of the Lebanon cedar. The mineral riches of the Atlas, so far as known, are silver, antimony, lead, copper, iron, rock-salt, sulphur, etc., but in no part are there extensive mines at present worked. The lion, leopard, and jackal still inhabit some parts of the region, and more abundantly, especially on the southern slopes, various species of antelope. The soudad, or big-horned sheep of Barbary, is a distinctive member of the Atlas fauna. From the NW. and N. slopes flow the principal rivers of Morocco and Algeria to the Atlantic Ocean and Mediterranean Sea; and from their S. slopes flow numerous streams, which are absorbed in the Sahara.

The ancients used the name Atlas in a vague way. The legendary Atlas, a single peak, cannot now be, and never could be, identified with any mountain in the range. The ancient geographers seem to have applied the name to several of the coast-hills of Mauritania, especially to some near Cape Spartel and others near Cape Ghir.

Augsburg (Ger. pron. ôwgs'bôrg; anc. Augusta Vindelicorum), a city of Bavaria, capital of the district of Swabia and Neuburg, at the angle formed by the junction of the Wertach and the Lech, 35 miles NW. of Munich. Elevation, 1340 feet. Lat. (St. Ulrich's Tower, 305 feet high) 48° 21' 42" N.; lon. 10° 54' 16" E. It consists of the inner city, the extensive fortifications about which were demolished in the second half of the nineteenth century to make way for new public places and streets and of half a dozen suburbs. Augsburg is a city of splendid churches. Most of them are structures dating from the Middle Ages, extended and rebuilt at various times, often with change of style. They abound in fine paintings and sculptures and the masterpieces of the goldsmith's art. The most venerable of these edifices is the Catholic cathedral, originally built in the tenth and eleventh centuries, converted into a Gothic structure in the fourteenth century, and restored in recent times. It has beautiful glass paintings, sculptured bronze doors of the eleventh century, and portraits of the long line of the bishops of Augsburg. The city contains many interesting old houses and sculptural monuments, among the latter being three magnificent fountains three hundred years old. The town-hall is a splendid lofty Renaissance building of the early part of the seventeenth century. Its principal apartment is the so-called Golden Hall. In the former episcopal palace, now used for administrative purposes, is a hall in which the Augsburg Confession was presented to the Emperor Charles V. in 1530. Among other interesting edifices are the Fugger Palace and the Maximilian Museum. Augsburg possesses handsome modern structures, as the new theatre and the new library, as well as fine monuments of the sculptural art of our times, among which is a grand soldiers' monument. It has a splendid gallery of paintings, various museums, and a library of 200,000 volumes. Augsburg has long been distinguished by its commercial spirit and by the activity and industry of its inhabitants, and is the seat of extensive manufactures, in which the water-power furnished by the Lech and Wertach is used almost as largely as steam. The chief industries are cotton-spinning and weaving, calico-printing, dyeing, and the manufacture of worsted yarn, thread, chemicals, machinery, metallic wares, and paper. An extensive trade is done in printing, engraving, and book-binding. The "Allgemeine Zeitung," a leading journal of Germany, now established at Munich, was formerly published here. Augsburg was for a long time one of the most influential money-markets on the continent. This pre-eminence was given to it by the famous house of Fugger, who at the time of the Reformation occupied a position analogous to that held by the Rothschilds at the present time. It formerly vied with Nuremberg as one of the great centres of trade in the interior of Europe. Its commerce is still extensive. Augsburg is a place of great antiquity, the Emperor Augustus having established a colony there about 15 B.C. It became a free imperial city in the thirteenth century, and rose to be a splendid republic and a great centre of art. It took a conspicuous part in the Reformation, with which for a long series of years its history is closely connected. It was incorporated in Bavaria in 1806. Pop. in 1890, 75,523; in 1900, 88,700.

It is situated at the head of steamboat navigation on the river. It is the third city of the state in population and wealth. The streets are wide and imposingly laid out, Broad Street, 120 feet wide, being one of the finest business thoroughfares in the United States. The city is connected by bridge with Hamburg, S.O. It is the seat of the Medical College of Georgia, which was founded in 1832, the Richmond Academy, Paine's Institute (for colored students), and of other collegiate institutions. Among the principal buildings are the public library, masonic temple, and cotton-exchange. Extensive railroad-shops are located here, besides which there are iron-foundries, machine-shops, planing, flour, cotton- and cotton-seed oil mills, glass, chemical- and marble-works, ice-factories, etc. The city has a very extensive trade in cotton, and produces a larger quantity of unbleached cotton goods than any other city of the Union. The prosperity of Augusta has been promoted by the construction of a canal 7 miles long, which affords immense water-power for manufacturing purposes. Three signers of the Declaration of Independence—Hall, Walton, and Guinnett—are buried in this city. Pop. in 1880, 21,891; in 1890, 33,400; in 1900, 39,441.

Aurich, ǝw'rik, a town of Prussia, in Hanover, and the chief place in East Friesland, 13 miles NE. of Emden. Pop. (inclusive of the garrison) in 1900, 6013.

Aurievville, aw'ree-vil, a post-village of Montgomery co., N.Y., on the Mohawk River, about 4 miles below Fonda.

Aurignac, ǝreen'yāk', a town of France, Haute-Garonne, 38 miles SW. of Toulouse. Pop. 1000.

Aurigny, Channel Islands. See ALDERNEY.

Aurillac, ǝree'yāk' (anc. Aureli'acum), a town of France, capital of the department of Cantal (Auvergne), on the Jordanne, 269 miles S. of Paris. Among the ancient buildings of Aurillac may be mentioned the castle of St. Stephen, the church of St. Gérard, that of Notre Dame, and the college, an extensive pile of buildings, containing a valuable library and cabinets of mineralogy. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 17,459.

Auriol, ǝre-ol', a commune of France, department of Bouches-du-Rhône, 14 miles NE. of Marseilles. Pop. 2500.

Auronzo, ǝw-rōn'zo, a commune of northern Italy, 30 miles NE. of Belluno, with rich zinc-mines. Pop. 4000.

Aurora, aw-rō'rā, a county in the S. part of South Dakota. Area, 724 sq. m. Firesteel Creek intersects the NE. corner. The surface is level and is dotted with flowing artesian wells. Stock-raising and grain-growing are the chief industries. Capital, Plankinton. Pop. in 1890, 5045; in 1900, 4011.

Aurora, a post-hamlet of Etowah co., Ala., about 55 miles SSE. of Huntsville.

Aurora, a post-village of Madison co., Ark., about 40 miles N. of Osark.

Aurora, a city of Kane co., Ill., on the Fox River and on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and other railroads, 39 miles WSW. of Chicago. It is an important commercial and manufacturing centre, and contains several stove- and iron-works, cotton-factories, smelting and refining works, machine-shops, flour- and woollen-mills, and manufactories of carriages, silverware, sash and blinds. Here are extensive railway car-shops, etc. Aurora claims to have been the earliest city of the United States to light its streets by electricity (1891). Pop. in 1890, 19,688; in 1900, 24,147.

Aurora, a banking city of Dearborn co., Ind., on the Ohio River and on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern and the Cleveland, Cintiinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Rs., 24 miles W. by S. of Cincinnati and 4 miles below Lawrenceburg. It has manufactures of iron products, wheels, flour, etc. Pop. in 1900, 3645.

Aurora, a post-town of Buchanan co., Iowa, 33 miles by rail NW. of Dyersville. Pop. in 1900, 331.

Aurora, a post-village of Cloud co., Kan., 11 miles by rail SE. of Concordia, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Aurora, a post-hamlet of Marshall co., Ky., on the Tennessee River, about 40 miles SE. of Paducah.

Aurora, a post-township (town) of Hancock co., Me., 25 miles E. by N. of Bangor. Pop. in 1900, 152.

Aurora, a banking city of Lawrence co., Mo., on the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis and the St. Louis and San Francisco Rs., 31 miles SW. of Springfield. It has lead- and zinc-mines. Pop. in 1900, 6191.

Aurora, a banking city, capital of Hamilton co., Neb., at the junction of two railroads, 20 miles S. of Central City. It has various manufactures, creameries, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1921.

Aurora, a banking post-village of Cayuga co., N.Y., is finely situated on Cayuga Lake, 25 miles by rail NNW. of Ithaca. It is the seat of Wells College, a large seminary for young ladies. Pop. in 1900, about 400.

Aurora, a township (town) of Erie co., N.Y. Pop. in 1900, 4015, including East Aurora village. See EAST AURORA.

Aurora, a post-town of Beaufort co., N.C., 30 miles NE. of Newbern. Pop. in 1900, 314.

Aurora, a post-village of Portage co., Ohio, on the Mahoning division of the Erie R., 23 miles SE. of Cleveland.

Aurora, or Aurora Mills, a city of Marion co., Oregon, on Mill Creek and on the Southern Pacific R., 29 miles S. of Portland. Its banking point is Woodburn. It has several mills and is largely engaged in hop-raising. Pop. in 1900, 122.

Aurora, a banking post-town of Brookings co., S. Dak., on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 6 miles E. by S. of Brookings. It is a shipping point for farm-produce.

Aurora, a village of Wise co., Tex., 25 miles from Fort Worth.

Aurora, a post-village of Preston co., W. Va., 8 miles from Oakland, Md.

Aurora, a post-hamlet of Washington co., Wis., about 36 miles NNW. of Milwaukee.

Aurora, a township (town) of Wauwasha co., Wis. Pop. in 1900, 1025.

Aurora, or Machell's (ma-shel's) Corners, a banking town and outpost of York co., Ontario, on the Grand Trunk R., 30 miles N. of Toronto. It contains a mechanics' institute, foundry, several mills and factories, a tannery, etc. Pop. in 1901, 1590.

Aurora, an island in the Pacific, one of the New Hebrides.

Aurora Mills, Marion co., Oregon. See AURORA.

Aurora Springs, a post-town of Miller co., Mo., 37 miles by rail SW. of Jefferson City. It is famed for its medicinal waters. Pop. in 1900, 900.

Aurora Station, a post-hamlet of Portage co., Ohio. Auro'ra-ville, or Auro'rahville, a post-village of Wauwasha co., Wis., in Aurora township (town), on Willow Creek, 7 miles N. of Berlin.

Aurangabad, aw-rung-ga-bad', or Aurangabad, aw-rung-ga-bad' (i.e., the "abode of Aurangzeb"), a city of British India, in the Nizam's Dominions, 180 miles ENE. of Bombay. Lat. 19° 54' N.; lon. 75° 23' E. When approached from the N. the view of the town is imposing, its large white domes with gilded points and its lofty minarets appearing to rise from the midst of beautiful groves; but signs of former decay are everywhere visible. The city is but a shadow of what it was in the seventeenth century. It covers a space of about 7 miles in circumference, and is surrounded by a stone wall with round towers. One of the most striking edifices is the mausoleum erected by Aurangzeb to the memory of his daughter. Its domes are of white marble. Aurangabad was a favorite residence of Aurangzeb. Pop. in 1901, 26,165.

Ausable, aw-sab'l', a river of Michigan, rises in the N. part of the lower peninsula by several branches which unite in the E. part of Crawford co. It runs nearly southeastward and enters Lake Huron at Oscoda, in Iosco co. The length of the main stream is about 80 miles. It is much resorted to by anglers on account of its grayling. Near its mouth is a light-house.

Ausable, a small river of New York, rises among the Adirondacks, in Essex co., by two branches which unite at Ausable Forks. Below this point it runs northeastward and forms the boundary between Clinton and Essex cos. until it enters Lake Champlain. It is a rapid river, running in the lower part of its course through a deep chasm. See AUSABLE CHASM.

Ausable, a post-city of Iosco co., Mich., on Lake Huron, at the mouth of the Ausable River, about 65 miles (direct) or 89 miles by rail NNE. of Bay City. It is contiguous to Oscoda, its banking point. Ausable has several large lumber-mills, saw- and blind-factories, etc. Pop. in 1890, 4328; in 1900, 1116.

Ausable, a township (town) of Clinton co., N.Y., contains Keeseville and Clintonville villages. Iron is mined and smelted. A branch railroad extends hence to Plattsburg. Pop. in 1900, 2195.

Ausable Chasm, or Birmingham Falls, a post-village of Clinton co., N.Y., on the Ausable River, 2 miles from Keeseville and 3 miles from Port Kent Station. The river here falls about 70 feet and enters a deep and narrow chasm, which is nearly 2 miles long and is noted for picturesque scenery and for perhaps the most remarkable and interesting rock-formation E. of the Rocky Mountains. The vertical walls of the chasm are formed of Potsdam sandstone, and rise ("Cathedral Rocks," "Sentinel") 100-175 ft. high. At one point the stream contracts to a width of 12 ft., increasing its depth to 60 ft. The chasm is safely navigated by tourist-boats.

Ausable Forks, a post-village of Essex co., N.Y., on the Ausable River, at the junction of its two branches, about 23 miles SW. of Plattsburg. It has manufactures of pulp and paper.

Ausable Lakes, two small sheets of water contained in the Adirondack Reserve, N.Y., lying NW. of the Boreas Range, and noted for their picturesque scenery. The Lower Ausable Lake is about 2 miles long, and is situated 1900 feet above sea-level. The Upper Lake is somewhat smaller, and is 1900 feet in elevation.

Auscha, aw-sha', a town of Bohemia, 10 miles NE. of Leitmeritz. Pop. in 1900, 2642.

Auschwitz, aw-shwits' (Pol. Oświęcim, os-we-d'tsin), a town of Austria-Hungary, in Galicia, near the Vistula, 33 miles WSW. of Cracow. Pop. in 1900, 6838.

Ausci, an ancient name of AUCH.

Ausejo, aw-sá'ho, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 23 miles SE. of Logroño. Pop. of commune, 1500.

Ausonia, an ancient poetic name of ITALY.

Auspitz, aw'pits, a town of Moravia, 18 miles by rail SSE. of Brünn. Pop. in 1900, 3597.

Aussa, aw-sá, or Houssa, hōw-sá, a small Afar state, ruled by a sultan, between Abyssinia and the Bay of Tadjura, near the parallel of 12° N. The town of Aussa was formerly important.

Aussee, aw-sá', a town of Austria-Hungary, in Styria, 8 miles NE. of Hallstatt. Its rich mines of rock-salt have been worked for more than 1000 years. Pop. 1500.

Aussee, a village in Moravia, Austria-Hungary, 21 miles by rail NNW. of Olmütz. Pop. about 1750.

Aussig, aw'sig, a town of Austria-Hungary, in Bohemia, 11 miles NW. of Leitmeritz, on the Elbe. It mines and ships much coal, and has numerous manufactures, as well as chemical-works and large boat-yards. Pop. in 1900, 37,265.

Austell, a banking post-town of Cobb co., Ga., 18 miles W. by N. of Atlanta, on the Southern and the Bowden Lithia Springs Rs. It has several important mineral springs. Pop. in 1900, 648.

Austem, aw's'ten, a post-town of Preston co., W. Va., on the Baltimore and Ohio R., 115 miles SE. of Wheeling. Here are coal-mines and coke-works. Pop. in 1900, 289.

Austerlitz, aw's'ter-lits (Bohem. Slavkov, sláv'kov), a town of Moravia, 12 miles ESE. of Brünn, on the Lattawa. It has a splendid castle and is celebrated for the victory gained by Napoleon over the Emperors of Austria and Russia, Dec. 2, 1805. Pop. in 1900, 3703.

Austerlitz, or East Plainfield, a post-village of Kent co., Mich., on Grand River, 2 miles from Belmont Station. Pop. about 150.

Austerlitz, a post-village of Columbia co., N.Y., in Austerlitz township (town), about 18 miles E. by N. of Hudson. Pop. of the town in 1900, 974.

Aus'tin, a county in the southeast-central part of Texas, has an area of 712 sq. m. It is intersected by the navigable Brasos River. Capital, Belleville. Pop. in 1890, 17,859; in 1900, 20,676.

Austin, a post-town of Lonoke co., Ark., on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern R., 25 miles NE. of Little Rock. Pop. in 1900, 196.

Austin, Cook co., Ill., on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 6 miles W. of Chicago, is a suburb of that city.

Austin, a post-village of Scott co., Ind., on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis R., 35 miles N. of Louisville, Ky. Pop. about 400. The banking point is Scottsburg.

Austin, a post-hamlet and station of Neosho co., Kan., on the Neosho River, 13 miles S. of Humboldt.

Austin, a post-village of Oakland co., Mich., 44 miles NNW. of Detroit and 3 miles from Davisburg Station.

Austin, a banking city, capital of Mower co., Minn., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Chicago Great Western Rs., 101 miles S. of St. Paul. It has meat-packing establishments, brick- and tile-works, furniture manufactories, railroad machine-shops, etc. Pop. in 1890, 3901; in 1900, 5474.

Austin, a post-village of Tunica co., Miss., on the Mississippi River, 13 miles (direct) NE. of Helena, Ark. Pop. in 1900, 142.

Austin, a post-village of Cass co., Mo., on the Grand River, 12 miles S. of Harrisonville.

Austin, a post-borough of Potter co., Pa., on the Buffalo and Susquehanna R., 20 miles SE. of Port Allegany. It has extensive lumber works. The banking point is Olean. Pop. in 1900, 2300.

Austin, a banking post-town, capital of Lander co., Nev., is on the Nevada Central R., near the base of the Toiyabe Mountain range, 93 miles S. of Battle Mountain and about 150 miles E. of Virginia City. It is situated in an arid region and is surrounded by mountains and deep cañons. Silver has been extensively mined here. Pop. in 1900, 702.

Austin, or Austin City, the capital of Texas and of Travis co., is on the left bank of the Colorado River (at the head of navigation) and on the Houston and Texas Central and the International and Great Northern Rs., 164 miles W.

by N. of Houston and about 75 miles NNE. of San Antonio. Lat.  $30^{\circ}16'N$ .; lon.  $97^{\circ}42'W$ . Austin contains the capitol or state-house, one of the largest buildings of the world, the governor's mansion, University of Texas, various collegiate institutions, state asylums for the insane, blind, deaf and dumb, and a land-office. The city is an important shipping point for agricultural produce, live-stock, cotton, wool, and hides. The great Austin dam, constructed across the Colorado River for water-power and manufactures, and located 2 miles above the city,—a huge piece of granite masonry, measuring 1200 feet in length, 60 to 70 feet in height, and 18 to 65 feet in thickness,—was swept away in 1900. Pop. in 1870, 4428; in 1880, 10,960; in 1890, 14,476; in 1900, 22,258.

Austin, Preston co., W. Va. See AUSTIN.

Austintown, a post-village of Ashtabula co., Ohio, on the Pennsylvania R., 53 miles N. by W. of Youngstown. Pop. about 250.

Austintown, a post-village of Tioga co., Pa., 20 miles NW. of Wellsboro.

Austine Springs, a post-village and summer-resort of Washington co., Tenn., on the Watanga River, 10 miles NE. of Jonesboro.

Austintown, a post-village of Mahoning co., Ohio, 5 miles W. of Youngstown.

Austinville, a post-hamlet of Butler co., Iowa. Pop. about 80.

Austinville, a post-village of Bradford co., Pa., about 44 miles N. by E. of Williamsport.

Austinville, a post-village of Wythe co., Va., on New River, 10 miles from Max Meadows Station. It has a foundry and smelting-furnace. Pop. about 500.

Austral Archipelago, aw-tral ar-ke-pol'-e-go, or Tubuai (too-boo-i') Islands, a group of volcanic islands in the Pacific S. of the Society Islands and SW. of the Low Archipelago. Lat. about  $21^{\circ}50'$  to  $23^{\circ}42'S$ .; lon.  $147^{\circ}$  to  $155^{\circ}W$ . They are all small, and have a population of about 1000.

Australasia, aw-tral-á'she-á, a division of the globe, in the classification of some geographers, consisting of the continent of Australia, the islands of Tasmania, New Zealand, and the Fiji group, and by others made to include those parts of the Malay Archipelago and Polynesia which lie between lon.  $130^{\circ}$  and  $170^{\circ}E$ .—viz., Papua, the Aru Islands, Timor Laut, Neu-Pommern, Neu-Mecklenburg, New Caledonia, and the Admiralty, Solomon, New Hebrides, and Queen Charlotte Islands, and, according to some geographers, some other groups. It is also called Melanesia ("black islands"), many of its native inhabitants being black.

Australia, aw-trá'-le-á, a federation bearing the title of Commonwealth, consisting of the six colonies ("original states") of New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, and Tasmania. (See AUSTRALIA, island.) It dates from Jan. 1, 1901. The legislative power is vested in a federal parliament, consisting of a senate and a house of representatives. The senate consists of 36 members, 6 from each of the "original states," the senatorial term being six years. The house of representatives has about twice as many members as the senate, and is chosen for a term of three years, the representation of the several states being according to population. The executive power, vested in the King of England, is exercised by a governor-general, who is assisted by an executive council of ministers. The capital of the commonwealth is Melbourne.

Australia (i.e., "southern" region), formerly New Holland, the largest island in the world, but often, on account of its vast extent, regarded as a continent, is situated approximately between  $10^{\circ}47'$  and  $39^{\circ}11'S$  lat. and between  $113^{\circ}$  and  $153^{\circ}30'E$  lon., having the Pacific on the E., the Indian Ocean on the S. and W., and the Arafura Sea on the N. It measures about 2400 miles in greatest length from E. to W., and about 2000 miles from N. to S. Its extreme points are Cape York, in the N.; Cape Wilson, in the S.; Cape Byron, in the E.; and Cape Inscription, in the W. The area and population of its political divisions (all of them British colonies) and of the whole continent are approximately as follows:

Colonies.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. in 1901.
New South Wales.....	310,660	1,354,846
Victoria.....	87,884	1,301,070
South Australia, with Northern Territory	903,690	362,604
Western Australia.....	975,920	184,124
Total .....	2,946,651	3,599,240

The coast-line is conspicuously wanting in inlets, except on the N., where we find the Gulf of Carpentaria, Van Diemen Gulf, Queen's Channel, and Cambridge Gulf. On the NW., Admiralty Gulf, Collier Bay, and King Sound are noteworthy indentations of the coast. Other indentations are Exmouth Gulf and Shark Bay, on the W.; Spencer Gulf, Gulf of St. Vincent, Port Phillip Bay, Encounter Bay, and the Great Australian Bight, on the S.; and Moreton Bay, Hervey Bay, and Broad Sound, on the E.

Dominant Physiographic Features.—Australia is most strikingly lacking in the physiographic features that distinguish the other continents. There are no mountain-chains that are in any way comparable with the Andes, Rocky Mountains, Alps, or Himalayas, there are no streams of first magnitude, and no lakes that can even take a third place among the lakes of the globe. The most salient feature of the land is the vast interior Austral Plain (largely made up of accentuated desert, and having in its rising rocky swells and flat-lying sands, the absence of permanent water-courses, and torrid temperature, all the characteristics of the African Sahara), which extends directly northward from the Great Australian Bight, and occupies considerably more than one-half of the continent. It rises centrally to a plateau of moderate elevation (600–1000 feet), and westward falls with the tracts known as the Great Australian or Victoria Deserts. The construction of most of this central region shows it to have been a region only recently occupied by the sea or by vast lacustrine waters, which, extending northward to the Gulf of Carpentaria, separated an Eastern Australia from an Asiatic or Western Australia. The Gulf of Carpentaria itself is a shallow and largely sedimented basin, and its inner borders mark almost the only extent of flat shore-line on the continent. In the interior of the central basin are numerous shallow lakes, tarns, and pools, some of them markedly saline, and giving evidence in this and other ways of being relicts of an ancient interior sea. They are lakes of interior drainage, and receive affluents of inconstant flow and discharge. The largest of these are Torrens, Gairdner, and Eyre in the south, and Amadeus, which occupies a nearly central position in the continent, and seemingly measures at times nearly 200 miles in length. A series of lakes of like character extends over the SW. part of the territory of Western Australia.

The only extensive river-system of Australia is that of the Murray, its main course separating Victoria from New South Wales, with its chief tributaries and branches, the Darling, Lachlan, and Murrumbidgee. This stream is considerably smaller than the Danube. Other streams, some of which afford a navigation of 150–300 miles, are Roper and Victoria Rivers, in the N.; the Burdekin, Brisbane, and Fitzroy, in Queensland; Swan, Murchison, Gascoyne, Fortescue, De Grey, Ashburton, and Fitzroy, in the W. and NW. In Victoria the longest streams are the Glenelg, Avoca, Hopkins, Goulburn, Loddon, Wannon, and Wimmera, all inconsiderable, but some of great importance in irrigation and in mining operations. Among the streams of the E. coast are the Hawkesbury, Hunter, Shoalhaven, Clarence, Macleay, and Manning. The streams are in many cases dried up or reduced to a succession of pools in summer. Cooper Creek or River, which discharges into Lake Eyre, appears to be the largest stream of the interior. In the western section of the southern coast no stream or water-course of any size enters the sea through a littoral of nearly 1000 miles extent.

Mountains.—The main mountain-systems of Australia are comprised in the nearly continuous chain which borders the eastern contour of the continent, and in their different parts are known as the Australian Alps, Great Dividing Range, Blue Mountains, and Liverpool, New England, and Craig ranges. None of their summits attain the true snow-line. Consequently there are no glaciers of any magnitude. The culminating point of the continent is Mount Kosciuszko, sometimes known as Mount Townsend, near the head-waters of the Murray River, which attains an elevation of 7347 feet. Among the other lofty summits may be mentioned Mounts Bogong (6508 ft.), Feathertop (6303 ft.), Hotham (6100 ft.), and Cobberas (6025 ft.), all in Victoria. The mountains of the east coast are bold and rugged, and deeply incised by the traversing water-courses. A portion of the west and southwest coasts is outlined by the Victoria and Darling ranges, mountains of minor elevation. There is, so far as is known, no active volcano on the continent, but evidences of recent volcanic activity are particularly marked in the region lying immediately to the northward and westward of Melbourne, the "Australia Felix" of some geographers, where numerous well-preserved cones and crater-lakes are a feature in the landscape.

Geology and Minerals.—The geology of Australia is still very imperfectly known, but the deposits of the Paleozoic and Archæan ages which are found in the E., S., and W., and also exposed by denudation in many parts of the interior, clearly show that the continent belongs to an early epoch of world-making. An early connection with Asia appears to have been broken at about the close of the Mesozoic period, when the interior of the continent was still occupied by its vast lacustrine or oceanic waters. In these were deposited the materials of the "desert sandstone," which occupies perhaps fully one-third the area of the whole country and presents singularly uniform features. While perhaps most geologists consider it to be of marine origin (Tertiary), others assume it to be of lacustrine character, and point to the absence of marine organic remains as a support to their conclusion. Australia has since 1851 stood in the first rank for the production of gold; but the rich alluvial mines at first worked are now to a great extent exhausted, and the present product is mostly from quartz-reefs. Gold is chiefly worked in New South Wales, Victoria, and, to some extent, in Queensland. Victoria and South Australia, the latter especially, have rich deposits of copper. Queensland and New South Wales lead in the mining of tin. Good iron-ore and excellent coal are very abundant in large areas of the eastern colonies, the coal-mines of New South Wales yielding several millions of tons annually; it is assumed that the present rate of production might be continued for 500 years. Valuable oil-shales abound. Cinnabar, lead, and silver are reported at various points. Diamonds and other precious stones occur.

Climate.—The absence of high interior mountains causes a marked deficiency in the rainfall of Australia, except along many parts of the immediate sea-border. Consequently there are great areas of desert-land, and many well-settled regions are exposed to hot winds from the interior, which come laden with dust and discomfort, but are not prejudicial to health. Much of the interior has an annual rainfall of less than 5 inches, and some parts appear to be free of precipitation for years at a time. Portions of the coast-border, on the other hand, receive as much as 50-70 inches. The annual rainfall is, at Sydney, 50 inches; at Bathurst (nearly 100 miles inland), 23 inches; at Melbourne and Adelaide, 20-25 inches; and at many points of the coast of Queensland, 40-80 inches. Australia, owing to its position removed from the frigid zone, has not that extreme climatic range that is found in Asia or America, and in its heat quality agrees most nearly with Africa. The minimum temperature noted on the lowland is about 27° (Melbourne), and therefore but a few degrees below the freezing-point. On the other hand, a shade temperature of 131° (sun, 155°) was observed by Sturt in the interior; and even on the coast, at Brisbane, a registry of 183° has been noted. The extreme range of the mercury is therefore only 130°, or 125 degrees less than it is in Asia. The winter climate of Sydney is about that of Sicily. At Melbourne the temperature ranges ordinarily from about 30° to 100°, with a mean of 58°. At Sydney the mean is about 5° higher, a little more moderate than it is at Adelaide and Perth. Snow is practically unknown in the lowlands, and it is known to have remained on the ground but once in Sydney, on June 23, 1836. In the mountains, more particularly of New South Wales, the snowfall may be very heavy, and snow-storms of 3 and 4 weeks' continuous duration are a part of the meteorological conditions of the Australian Alps. Over 3 feet of snow are known to have fallen on a single day. Partially permanent glaciers are formed on the higher slopes of Mount Kosciuszko, where the snow has accumulated to depths of 40-50 feet. Droughts, floods, and violent storm-winds (the southerly "busters"), travelling with velocities of from 50 to 150 miles per hour, are conditions of the Australian climate which are opposed to man's comfort and advance, but otherwise the climate is on the whole exceptionally healthful. Endemic and symptomatic diseases are almost unknown, and the death-rate of the white population, 19 per thousand, is considerably lower than it is in England and Wales (25).

Vegetation.—The vegetation of Australia has the composite character of the floras of tropical and temperate regions, and on the higher mountain-slopes of the SE. sub-alpine forms are also introduced. In regions that are favored by the tropical rains, the border-strips more particularly of the E., S., and W., the vegetation is of surpassing luxuriance, the palms, tree-ferns, aroids, and arborescent orchids, as tropical elements, helping to build up a matted primeval forest of wonderful sublimity. Australia is pre-eminently the home of myrtaceous plants, and the acacias number several hundred species. Among some of the more distinctive forms of Australian vegetation may be mentioned the numerous species of blue-gum or eucalyptus—the giants in height of the vegetable kingdom, individuals seemingly not rarely attaining a height of 400 feet and over—casuarina ("he" and "she" oak), screw-pine or pandanus, and baobab. The scrub of the interior is largely made up of acacias ("mulga scrub") and of mallee ("mallee scrub"), a species of eucalyptus. In the grass-lands which follow or intermingle with the scrub the kangaroo-grass, which not rarely attains to man's height, is the distinctive form of vegetation, just as the seemingly useless and formidable spinifex or porcupine-grass (Triodia irritans) is the representative vegetal type of the sand and arid tracts north of lat. 28° S.,—a scourge to man and beast. Australia has more plants that are exclusive to itself than any other territory of equal extent, and it holds comparatively few species that are common to other continents. The tracts lying east and west of the central Austral Plain have vegetations that are eminently dissimilar, and they argue for long-continued and, until recently, existing separation. Many features in the Australian flora point to a former land connection with southern Africa and other lands of the Austral (subantarctic) region of the globe. The arable parts of Australia have proved well fitted for nearly all the crops of Europe and America. Wheat, barley, maize, the vine, the silk-mulberry, and northward cotton, sugar-cane, and tropical fruits grow to perfection. European forage plants are to some extent succeeding the native grasses.

Animals.—The Australian mammalian fauna is the most distinctive of any of the globe, since it lacks nearly all the types that are found elsewhere, and presents a remarkable array of forms that are foreign to the other zoogeographical regions. These are mainly the marsupials (kangaroos, wombats, phalangers, kangaroo-rats) and the egg-laying monotremes, the duck-bill or ornithorhynchus, and spiny-hedgehog or echidna. Excepting some of the minor rodents and bats, and possibly a species of wild dog, the dingo, the region is entirely deficient in the types of the Placentalia, or those forms which are attached to the womb in their prenatal condition. Hence, there are no indigenous dogs, cats, sheep, goats, cattle, horses, swine, etc., although, singularly enough, a number of these forms are represented analogously among the implacental (marsupials), having apparently been brought to this condition through convergent development. The divergent type of the Australian fauna argues in favor of an isolation of the continent, thereby preventing the intermingling of foreign types of animals. There is reason to believe that much of the Australian fauna is part of a much more extensive fauna of the south, some of whose representatives are still found in South America and Africa. Of the more distinctive types of the bird fauna may be mentioned the emu and cassowary, which represent the ostrich of Africa and rhea of South America. Of the domestic animals of Australia the sheep is the most important; and the wool of Australia ranks as its most valuable commercial product,—surpassing in quantity, and certainly squalling in quality, that of any other country. Horses are largely bred for exportation to India. The camel has been introduced to a limited extent, and has done some service in the explorations of the interior.

The native peoples of Australia are of many tribes and languages, but appear to be of one original stock, which by some ethnologists has been linked with the Papuan, and by others with the Negrito, as represented by some of the tribes of the Malay Archipelago. Their dark color suggests the negro, but beyond that they show marked points of affinity with members of the Caucasian race. Their relationship is, however, too obscure to permit of unanimity of opinion among ethnologists as to their origin or incoming into the continent. They are very degraded, have slender religious notions, and have no agriculture, and no navigation except in the rudest canoes and floats. They practise cannibalism to some extent, and live mainly by hunting and fishing. Their dwellings and clothing are of the simplest kind. Their number is variously estimated at from 55,000 to 80,000.

History.—Australia is mentioned as Great Java and as Terra Australis by Portuguese and Dutch authorities of the sixteenth century. The Portuguese in all probability reached it in 1601, but it is not settled that this was the first discovery. There is an authentic record of a Dutch vessel having come to the coast in 1606, and in the same year the Spaniard Torres sailed through the strait which bears his name. The Dutch navigators, among whom were Hartog and Tasman, explored portions of the coast in the first half of the seventeenth century, and the Dutch gave to the island the name of New Holland. No colonization was attempted until 1788, after Cook had examined a large portion of the coast and taken formal possession for England. In that year a penal settlement was established by the British at Port Jackson, near Botany Bay. The Australian colonies were for a time penal institutions, and a large share of the settlers were convicts up to 1837, after which time comparatively few felons were sent out, and these chiefly to Western Australia, transportation to which ceased in 1867. The discovery of gold in 1851 gave a great impetus to immigration. The exploration of the interior of Australia has been going on for a hundred years, and is by no means yet complete. The names of Hunter, Oxley, Grey, Sturt, Leichardt, Kennedy, Stuart, Mitchell, Eyre, Burke, Wills, Howitt, Warburton, Giles, Gregory, and Forrest are prominent in this connection. The general result of the work is the establishment of the fact that great areas of the west and centre are hopelessly desert.

Australian Alps, a mountain-range of Australia, in the colonies of Victoria and New South Wales, extending from about lat. 38° S., lon. 145° 30' E., in a N.E. direction for about 300 miles, and forming part of the great Australian chain from Wilson's Promontory to Cape York. Its southwesterly part is known as the Great Dividing Range, and further westward as the Pyrenees. The loftiest summit is in New South Wales, in the Kosciusko knot (Mount Townsend), 7347 feet; Mount Bogong, in Victoria, is 6508 feet. Other lofty peaks are Feather-top and Buller. The mountains are largely covered with dense forest, and nowhere properly attain the snow-line.

Austrasia, aws-trä'she-a, one of the two kingdoms into which the Frankish realm under the Merovingians was divided from the sixth to the eighth century. It lay E. of Neustria, on both sides of the Rhine, and had Metz for its capital.

Austria, Lower and Upper. See LOWER AUSTRIA and UPPER AUSTRIA.

Austria-Hungary, aws-trä-a hüng-gä-re, or the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy (Ger. Österreich-ungarische Monarchie, öe'ter-rik'ish öön'gä-re-shih mo-när-ke'), an empire of central Europe, and one of the six great European powers. It is included between lat. 42° and 51° N. and lon. 9° 30' and 26° 30' E. This empire is a heterogeneous combination of various states or countries inhabited by peoples differing from one another in race, language, religion, and laws. It is bounded by the kingdom of Saxony on the NW., by the Prussian provinces of Silesia and Russian Poland on the N., by the Russian governments of Volhynia and Podolia on the E., by Rumania on the E. and S., by Serbia and the Turkish district of Novipazar (Novibasar) on the S., by Montenegro on the E. (at the extreme S.), by the Adriatic on the SW., by Italy on the W. and S., and by Switzerland and Bavaria on the W. Area, 261,030 sq. m. Austria-Hungary is second in extent of the European states, Sweden and Norway being reckoned as separate countries. The former Turkish provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina (placed under Austro-Hungarian administration by the Congress of Berlin in 1878), included within the above boundaries and area (having themselves an area of 19,697 sq. m.), do not nominally constitute part of the monarchy, but they may be practically considered as incorporated in it. The population (excluding Bosnia and Herzegovina), according to the census of 1900, was 45,405,267. The capital is Vienna.

Physical Features.—This is the most mountainous country of Europe except Switzerland. Tyrol, Carinthia, Styria, and Carniola, which are in the SW. part of the empire, are occupied by several groups of Alpine mountains, called the Rhetian, Noric, Carnic, and Julian Alps. The highest mountain in the empire is the Ortler-Spitze, a peak of the Rhetian Alps, which has an altitude of 12,814 feet above the sea-level. Other lofty summits are the Grossglockner, 12,460 ft.; the Grossvenediger, 12,010 ft.; Eiskogel, 11,710 ft.; Thurwieserspitze, 11,945 ft.; Payerpitze, 11,140 ft., etc. The curvilinear range of the Carpathian Mountains, extending for a distance of about 800 miles, and rising to 8737 ft. (Gerlesdorfer-Spitze), embraces within its broad sweep the vast level plain of Hungary. In the NW. the Riesengebirge (Giant Mountains), Erzgebirge (Ore Mountains), and the Böhmerwald (Bohemian Forest) enclose the great Bohemian basin. In the S. the Dinaric Alps stretch along the borders of Dalmatia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, and form a great buttress along the picturesque Adriatic. Tyrol has its glaciers, perpetual snow, and avalanches, and abounds in grand and picturesque scenery, the Dolomites of the Ampezzo district, with the towering Sorapis and Monte Cristallo (10,495 ft.), presenting particularly grand views of nature. The Stelvio Pass, or Stifiser-Joch, which descends from this region to join the route to the Valtellina, has the highest carriage-road in Europe, 9055 ft. The most important river is the Danube, which crosses the W. frontier at Passau, runs eastward and southward, and forms part of the southern boundary of the empire. It is joined by three large tributaries, the Drave, Theiss (the great river of the Hungarian lowland), and the Save. The Elbe, Oder, and Vistula rise within the territory of Austria-Hungary. The largest lake in the empire is the Balaton or Plattensee, in Hungary. Many small lakes occur in the mountainous districts.

Minerals.—This empire surpasses most countries of Europe in mineral resources. Gold, silver, copper, coal, iron, lead, tin, quicksilver, zinc, cobalt, antimony, bismuth, nickel, manganese, chrome, marble, slate, and precious stones are found. Coal and iron are the most important mineral products. In Galicia are the famous salt-mines of Wieliczka, and there are immense deposits of salt in the eastern Carpathians.

Climate, Vegetable Products, etc.—Climatically, Austria-Hungary may be divided into three zones, the most northern of which comprises part of Bohemia, Galicia, and Moravia. Here the winters are long and cold. The central zone lies between 46° and 49° N. lat., including Lower and Upper Austria, the greater part of Hungary, etc. Vienna, which is in this zone, has a mean annual temperature of 50°, a maximum of about 94°, and a minimum of -6°-8°. In the southern zone, including Dalmatia and Bosnia, the seasons are more mild and equable. Nearly one-third of the productive area of the monarchy is covered with forests of ash, beech, chestnut, elm, oak, pine, etc. The flora of Austria-Hungary is remarkable for its variety, comprising several thousand species of flowering plants. The soil of the plains and hills is generally fertile. The monarchy is a great grain- and fruit-producing country. Hungary is celebrated for its wine and wheat, and rears great numbers of cattle and horses. The cultivation of beets for sugar is on a large scale. Potatoes are extensively grown and much flax is produced. Among the wild animals are the bear, wolf, boar, fox, deer, lynx, wild cat, otter, chamois, and marmot.

Industry and Commerce.—The majority of the inhabitants of Austria-Hungary are engaged in agriculture and pursuits connected with the forests, but the manufacturing industries are absorbing a constantly increasing proportion of the population. Bohemia is a vast manufacturing region and Vienna a great industrial centre. The development of manufactures in Hungary has been remarkable in recent times. The manufactured products of the monarchy include cotton-, woolen-, linen- and silk-stuffs, beet-sugar and other food-stuffs, wares of gold, copper, iron, silver, tin, and zinc, leather goods, machinery, tobacco, paper, beer, chemicals, brandy, porcelain, glassware, china, trimmings, wooden-ware, buttons, railway material, and musical instruments. The principal seats of the cotton, woolen, and linen manufactures are in Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Vienna. Bohemia is famous for its manufactures of glass.

Austria-Hungary has, relatively to its area, but a small extent of sea-coast. Trieste is its principal seaport. In recent years Fiume has also become an important entrepôt of commerce. The Danube affords about 800 miles of steam navigation within the limits of the monarchy. The chief articles of export include timber, sugar, eggs, coal, cattle and horses, grain and flour, glass and china, leather goods, wine, malt, clothing and notions, wooden-ware, hides and skins, iron-ware and other metal wares, woolen goods, paper, wool, poultry, books, objects of art, seeds, silk, linen thread and linen goods, chemicals, dye-stuffs, and peas and beans.

Government.—The Austro-Hungarian Monarchy consists of two states or parts,—the empire of Austria (or Cisleithania, —i.e., the country this side of the Leitha, a small river forming part of the boundary between the two halves of the monarchy), in which the dominant race is the German, and the kingdom of Hungary (or Transleithania, —i.e., the country beyond the Leitha), in which the Magyars (Hungarians) predominate. Each of these has its own constitution, parliament, and ministers, while the army, navy, and foreign relations are common. The legislative power relating to common affairs and the voting of money to be applied to common purposes belong to the so-called Delegations, two bodies representing the two halves of the monarchy, consisting each of 60 members, two-thirds being elected by the lower house and one-third by the upper house of each of the parliamentary bodies. These Delegations, the members of which are elected for one year, meet together annually, the place of meeting being alternately Vienna, capital of Cisleithania, and Budapest, capital of Transleithania. The executive departments for common affairs are the ministry of foreign affairs, the ministry of war, and the ministry of finance. The two halves of the monarchy have the same system of coinage and of weights and measures. The hereditary head of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy bears the title of Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, King of Hungary, etc. The reigning dynasty is that of Hapsburg-Lorraine. The existing dualistic constitution of the monarchy is in the nature of an agreement between Austria and Hungary, the partnership being renewed at intervals of a few years.

The parliament of Cisleithania, called Reichsrat, consists of an upper and a lower house. The upper house is composed of princes of the imperial family, of hereditary nobles, of archbishops and bishops, and of life-members nominated by the emperor on account of their meritorious services. The members of the lower house are elected, in part directly and in part indirectly, by the vote of all citizens who are of age and possess a small property qualification. Each province has its diet, or provincial assembly, having control over a wide range of local affairs. The Hungarian diet, or parliament, consists of an upper house, or House of Magnates, very similar in its composition to the upper house in Cisleithania, and of a lower house elected by suffrage based upon the payment of a small tax. Croatia and Slavonia, which belong to the crown of Hungary, have a provincial diet, which meets at Agram, and are also represented in the Hungarian diet. For several centuries the Austrian princes of the house of Hapsburg were emperors of Germany; but in 1806 the old elective empire was abolished, after the hereditary dominions of the Hapsburgs had been erected, in 1804, into the Empire of Austria. From 1815 the western portion of the empire (previously included in the Holy Roman Empire of the Germans) was included in the German Bund, of which Austria was for many years the most influential member. In 1866, as competitors for the supremacy in Germany, Austria and Prussia engaged in a war, in which Prussia triumphed, and as a result Austria was excluded from the German body. In 1867 the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy was reorganized on a new dualistic basis, Hungary recovering the constitutional rights which she had forfeited after the revolution of 1848-49.

The following table gives the area of the various crown lands of the monarchy and the population according to the latest census:

Total, monarchy.....	241,333	45,405,556

Inclusive of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the area of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy is 261,030 sq. m., and its population in 1901 was about 47,000,000. The increase of the population from 1890 to 1900 (leaving the annexed regions out of account) was about 10 per cent. The population of the monarchy (including Bosnia and Herzegovina) may be set down now (1905) at about 48,500,000. The composition of the population of the monarchy (inclusive of Bosnia and Herzegovina), according to nationalities as represented by the languages spoken, was approximately as follows in 1900:

Slavic peoples	Germans.....	11,300,000
	Hungarians (Magyars).....	8,750,000
	Czechs and Slovaks.....	8,000,000
	Poles.....	4,250,000
	Ruthenians.....	3,800,000
	Croats, Serbs, and Bosniaks.....	5,000,000
	Slovaks.....	1,200,000
	Rumans.....	3,000,000
	Italians and Ladines.....	730,000
	Gypsies.....	100,000

Cisleithania includes about four-fifths of all the Germans, nearly all of the Czechs, Poles, Slovaks, and Italians, and about seven-eighths of the Ruthenians. Transleithania includes nearly all the Hungarians and Slovaks, four-fifths of the Croats and Serbs, and about eleven-twelfths of the Rumanians. Nearly one-half of the population of the entire monarchy is composed of Slavs. The Czechs predominate in Bohemia and Moravia; Poles and Ruthenians make up the bulk of the population of Galicja; while the Hungarian crown-land of Croatia and Slavonia, the occupied provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Dalmatia and Carniola

(with parts of Carinthia, etc.) belong to the domain of the Southern Slavs. The Germans constitute the most numerous and politically preponderating nationality in Cisleithania (although comprising little more than one-third of the population), and the Hungarians are the most numerous and the dominant element in Transleithania (although numbering considerably less than one-half of the population).

About two-thirds of the total population are Roman Catholics; about one-tenth, United Greeks and United (Catholic) Armenians; about one-twelfth, Protestants (the Calvinists outnumbering the Lutherans); and about one-thirtieth, Orthodox Greeks. There are about 2,000,000 Jews, 750,000 Oriental Greeks, and 500,000 Mussulmans. About nine-tenths of the Protestants live in Hungary.

The history of the territorial development of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy is the history of a German, a Bohemian, and a Hungarian realm, brought together under the sway of a common dynasty, with the accretion to this complex realm of fragments of other states, Poland, Moldavia, Venice, Turkey. The nucleus of the mediæval Austrian realm was the duchy, later archduchy, of Austria, included in the present crown-lands of Upper and Lower Austria, one of the states which made up the old German Empire. Towards the close of the thirteenth century the duchy of Austria, together with Styria and Carniola, passed into the possession of Rudolph of Hapsburg (Habsburg), the founder of the present imperial and royal dynasty, who had risen from the position of a petty Swiss potentate to that of German emperor. Within the next hundred years the domain of the Hapsburgs was increased by the acquisition of Carinthia and Tyrol. The continuous line of Hapsburg emperors of Germany began in 1438. In 1526 the Bohemians elected as their king Ferdinand I. of Hapsburg, under whose brother, Charles V., Emperor of Germany, the sway of the house of Hapsburg extended over Spain (with her American possessions), the Netherlands, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, and the duchy of Milan. Bohemia was before long converted into a hereditary Austrian possession. From the year 1526, also, dates the rule of the Hapsburgs in Hungary, the possession of which country for about two centuries was divided between Austria, the Hungarian princes of Transylvania, and the Turks. The Belgian Netherlands belonged to Austria from 1713 to 1794, and Lombardy from 1713 to 1859 (with an intermission during the Napoleonic wars). Galicja was acquired in the first partition of Poland in 1772, and, in 1776, Bukowina was annexed. The Napoleonic wars gave to Austria the possession of the dominions of the Venetian Republic, Venetia, Dalmatia, and Venetian Istria. Of these territories Venetia was lost in 1866. The Congress of Berlin, in 1878, practically turned over Bosnia and Herzegovina to Austria-Hungary, which was also entrusted with the military administration of the Turkish sanjak of Novipazar.

Austria Sound, a body of water of the Franz Josef Archipelago (Franz-Josef Land), connecting on the N. with Queen Victoria Sea and separating on the E. Zichy Land from Wilczek Land.

Autauga, aw-taw'ga, a county in the central part of Alabama, has an area of 595 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Alabama River, and is partly drained by Autauga and Mulberry Creeks. Cotton, Indian corn, oats, and sweet potatoes are the staple products. Capital, Prattville. Pop. in 1890, 13,330; in 1900, 17,915.

Autau'gaville, a post-village of Autauga co., Ala., about 25 miles E. of Selma and 2 miles from the Alabama River. Pop. about 200.

Auterive, ô-te'rev', a town of France, department of Haute-Garonne, on the right bank of the Ariège, 16 miles by rail S. of Toulouse. Pop. of commune, 2500.

Autenuil, ô'tu'v', an arrondissement of Paris, in the extreme W. of the city, on the right bank of the Seine, formerly a noted village. Here Molière and Boileau resided.

Authon, a post-hamlet of Parker co., Tex.

Autissiodurum, the ancient name of AUXERRE.

Autlán, or Autlán de la Grana, ôw-tlân' dá lá grá'ná, a town of Mexico, state of Jalisco, 140 miles SW. of Guadalajara. It has a trade in cacao, salt, and cochineal. Pop. in 1900, 7715.

Autrain, ô-trân', a post-village, capital of Alger co., Mich., on Lake Superior and on the Autrain River, 30 miles by rail E. of Marquette.

Autricum, the ancient name of CHARTRES.

Autryville, a post-village of Colquitt co., Ga., 7 miles S. of Moultrie. Pop. about 150.

Autryville, a post-town of Sampson co., N.C., in Little Coharie township. Pop. in 1900, 61.

Autumn Leaves, a post-office of Wayne co., Pa.

Autun, ô'tün' (anc. Augustodunum), a city of France, capital of an arrondissement in the department of Saône-et-Loire, on the Arroux, 60 miles NW. of Mâcon and 230 miles by rail SE. of Paris. Pop. in 1901, 13,606. It is picturesquely seated at the foot of wooded mountains, and has an interesting mediæval cathedral. Large masses of its ancient walls remain, with two very beautiful and perfect gates. There are ruins of an amphitheatre and other Roman edifices. The town possesses several archaeological museums with choice collections. The manufactures include carpets, serges, cottonades, velvet, and paper.

Auvergne, ô'vairn' (anc. Arvern'), an old province of France, forming the present departments of Cantal, Puy-de-Dôme, and a small part of Haute-Loire. It was divided into Upper and Lower Auvergne, and had for capitals, respectively, Saint-Flour and Clermont-Ferrand.

Auvergne, av-vern', a post-hamlet of Jackson co., Ark., 8 miles by rail S. by E. of Newport.

Auvergne Mountains, a branch of the Cévennes, in France, extending chiefly in the departments of Puy-de-Dôme and Cantal, and separating the basins of the Allier, Cher, and Creuse from those of the Lot and Dordogne. These mountains form extensive and confused groups, which contain the culminating points of the interior of France,—viz., Puy-de-Sancy, of the Mont Dore group, 6186 feet; Plomb-de-Cantal, 6093 ft.; and Puy-de-Dôme, 4806 ft. The region is essentially a volcanic one, containing hundreds of extinct cones, with some perfectly preserved craters, and vast intrusions and sheets of basalt. There is no evidence of any eruption having taken place during the historic period, but the freshness of the volcanic outlines indicates (geologically) recent activity. The mountains are famous for their grandly picturesque scenery.

Auvernier, ô'vain'nyâ', a village of Switzerland, in the canton and 3 miles from the city of Neuchâtel, and on Lake Neuchâtel. It is noted for its wines.

Auvers-sur-Oise, ô'vain' sür wâ', a town of France, in Seine-et-Oise, 3 miles ENE. of Pontoise. Pop. 2000.

Auvillar, ô'vee'yâr', a town of France, in Tarn-et-Garonne, on the Garonne, 13 miles WSW. of Moissac. Pop. 800.

Aux Cayes, ô'kâ', Cayes, kâ', or Les Cayes, lâ'kâ', a town of Haiti, on the S. coast, 92 miles WSW. of Port-au-Prince. It is a bishop's see. It exports extensively coffee and logwood. Pop. estimated at about 25,000.

Auxerre, ô'sain' (anc. Autisiodorum), a town of France, capital of the department of Yonne, 105 miles by rail SSE. of Paris, on the Yonne. Pop. in 1901, 16,291. It is in a region of vineyards, and has boulevards occupying the site of its ancient walls. Its mediæval cathedral is a splendid edifice. The municipal library contains 80,000 volumes. The town gave its name to the mediæval county of Auxerrois.

Auximium, the ancient name of OSIMO.

Auxonne, ô'sonn', a fortified town of France, department of Côte-d'Or, on the Saône, 17 miles SE. of Dijon. Pop. 3000 (commune, 6000).

Auxvasse, ô'vass', a banking post-village of Callaway co., Mo., on the Chicago and Alton R., 12 miles S. of Mexico. Pop. in 1900, 337.

Aux-le-Château, ô'k'see' lèh shâ'tô', a town of France, department of Pas-de-Calais, on the Authie, 15 miles SW. of St. Pol. Pop. 2500.

Auzances, ô'ôzâs', a town of France, department of Creuse, 32 miles SE. of Guéret. Pop. 1300.

Auzon, ô'ôzn', a village of France, in Haute-Loire, on the Allier, 34 miles NW. of Le Puy.

Ava, â'vâ' (anc. Aeng-wa, "a fish-pond"), a ruined city, formerly capital of the Burmese dominions, on the Irrawadi, 10 miles SW. of Mandalay. Pop. about 7000 (?).

Ava, a kingdom. See BURMA.

Ava, a banking post-village of Jackson co., Ill., on the Mobile and Ohio R., 21 miles SE. of Sparta. Pop. in 1900, 984.

Ava, a banking post-village, capital of Douglas co., Mo., 14 miles S. by W. of Mansfield. Pop. in 1900, 221.

Ava, a post-village of Oneida co., N.Y., in Ava township (town), about 16 miles N. of Rome. Pop. of the town in 1900, 706.

Avacha, a bay of Kamchatka. See AVATOKA.

Avachinskaya, a volcano in Kamchatka. See AVATCHINSKAYA.

Avadsi, â'vâd'see', Awadsi, Avaji, â'vâ'jee', or Sumô'to, a town of Japan, on the island of Avadsi. Lat. 34° 21' N.; lon. 134° 47' E.

Avadsi, Awadsi, or Avaji, an island of Japan, in the strait between Hondo and Shikoku. It is 30 miles long. Chief town, Avadsi.

Availles, â'vî', a town of France, department of Vienne, on the Vienne, 17 miles E. of Olvray. Pop. 1000 (commune, 2000).

Avalanche, a post-village of Vernon co., Wis., 38 miles SE. of La Crosse. It is on an affluent of the Kickapoo River.

Avalanche Lake, a small lake in Essex co., N.Y., among the Adirondacks, is at the E. base of Mount McIntyre. Here is a great trap dike, by which Mount McMartin, which rises boldly from Avalanche Lake, is nearly bisected. The surface of this lake is 2360 feet above the tide.

Avallon, â'vâl'lôn' (anc. Abal'lo), a town of France, capital of an arrondissement in the department of Yonne, on the Voisin, 26 miles SE. of Auxerre. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 5906.

Avallon, av'â-lon, a large peninsula, forming the SE. part of Newfoundland, having Trinity Bay on the N. and Placentia Bay on the S.

Av'alon, a popular resort on the SE. side of the island of Santa Catalina, off the coast of California. Pop. about 350.

Avalon, a post-village of Livingston co., Mo., 13 miles SSE. of Chillicothe. The banking point is Hale. Pop. in 1900, 444.

Avalon, a post-borough and watering-place of Cape May co., N.J., on the West Jersey and Seashore R. Pop. 100.

Avalon, a post-borough of Allegheny co., Pa., formerly known as West Bellevue. Pop. in 1900, 2130.

Avalon, a post-village of Ellis co., Tex., 8 miles SW. of Ennis. Pop. about 200.

Avard, a post-village of Woods co., Okla. Pop. 150.

Avaricum, an ancient name of BOUENS.

Avare, â'vârs, a people of Turanian stock, probably akin to the Huns, who in the early Middle Ages settled in the region of the lower and middle Danube.

Avars, a Caucasian tribe in Daghestan, probably of Lezhgian stock.

Avignon, â-veen'yôn' (anc. Avenio), a city of France, capital of the department of Vaucluse, situated on the E. bank of the Rhone, here crossed by a suspension bridge (its fine old stone bridge of St. Beneset being now a ruin), 403 miles by rail SSE. of Paris and 53 miles NNW. of Marseilles. Lat. 43° 57' N.; lon. 4° 49' E. It is a very ancient city, built on a gently undulating surface and surrounded by lofty walls which are crowned with battlements flanked with square towers and adorned with handsome gates. Along the ramparts is a boulevard planted with elms, from the lofty platform of which, particularly from the Dome,—a rock which starts up abruptly from the Rhone to a height of 200-300 feet,—a fine view is obtained. The town is well built, but the streets are mostly narrow and crooked. Avignon is the seat of an archbishop and is a city of churches. The cathedral, a building of great extent, dates mainly from the eleventh century. The richly sculptured chapel of the Resurrection is a masterpiece. Several popes officiated in this cathedral, and Innocent VI., Urban V., and Gregory XI. were consecrated in it. The former palace of the popes, now used as a barracks, is a vast irregular mediæval Gothic structure, with strong towers, some of them 150 feet high. The chamber of the Inquisition and the instruments of torture are still shown here. The church of the Cordeliers and the tomb of Petrarch's Laura were destroyed at the revolution. The town possesses a library of about 120,000 volumes, with 4000 manuscripts, and a fine museum of antiquities, the Musée Calvet. The city has manufactures of silk and other textiles, chemicals, dyes, matches, machinery, metallic wares, paper, etc., and a large trade in wine, brandy, grain, and other articles. Avignon was the residence of the popes from 1309 to 1376. In 1348 it passed from the hands of the rulers of Provence to those of Rome, and remained a papal possession until it was seized by France in 1791. From the early part of the fourteenth century till the end of the papal rule it was the seat of a university. Pop. in 1891, 43,453; in 1901, 40,665.

Azores, az-ôr' (Port. Açores, á-so'rásh), or Western Islands, a series of islands in the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Portugal, situated between lat. 36° 59' and 39° 44' N. and lon. 25° and 31° 16' W., and about 800 miles from the coast of Portugal. They are 9 in number, besides several islets, and arranged in three groups: the NW. group is composed of the islands of Flores and Corvo; the central group, about 114 miles SE. of these, consists of Terceira, São Jorge, Pico, Fayal, and Graciosa; and the third group, 69 miles SE. of the central, of São Miguel (St. Michael) and Santa Maria (St. Mary). São Miguel is the largest of all the islands, having an area of about 300 sq. m.; it is also the richest and most populous. Total area, 920 sq. m. The Azores, which are of volcanic origin, present a very rugged though picturesque aspect, being lofty, precipitous, and generally of a conical form. The most remarkable of these summits is the Peak of Pico, or Pico Alto, which rises to the height of 7613 feet. Other prominent summits are the Pico de Vara, on São Miguel; the Pico de Esperanza, on São Jorge; and the Caldera of Fayal. The surface consists almost exclusively of recent lavas, tuffs, basalts, and agglomerates; on Santa Maria alone are there marine deposits of an earlier period. The caldera structure is prominently represented, and there are many beautiful caldera-lakes (calderas of Furnas and Sete-Cidades, on São Miguel). Though presenting a very unpromising appearance from the sea, a closer inspection discovers these islands to be covered with vineyards, cornfields, and groves of lemon-, orange- and banana-trees. The climate, though humid, is delightful, and brings every sort of vegetable product to perfection. The lowest recorded temperature (January) is 45°; the highest (July), 86°. The average yearly temperature is, at Ponta Delgada, 63°. The islands are becoming a winter-resort. The sugar-cane, coffee-plant, and tobacco grow luxuriantly; and fruits and plants of all kinds and from all countries can be successfully cultivated. The Azores produce wine and brandy, oranges, lemons, pineapples, and corn, the greater part of which finds its way to Great Britain, Portugal, Brazil, Germany, and the United States. They also export considerable quantities of coarse linen, salt pork, and beef.

The great hinderance to the prosperity of the Azores is their want of good harbors; the only tolerable port being that of Angra, the capital of the island group, on Terceira, and even that offers little safety except in the fine season; ports of less security are those of Horta, on Fayal, and Ponta Delgada, on São Miguel. The islands are subject to violent and destructive earthquakes, and active volcanic phenomena have manifested themselves as well in the surrounding seas (submarine) as on the land-parts, sudden elevations of new islands being a repeated occurrence. Fountains of boiling water and solfataras are plentiful on some of the islands. The period of the first discovery of the Azores is not ascertained, but they were known, and several of them were laid down in maps, in the fourteenth century. Little, however, was known of them till after the year 1431, between which date and 1460 the islands were successively discovered and explored by the Portuguese. The Portuguese government took possession of them, and they were given the name of Açores, from the great number of hawks found on the islands, -açor being the Portuguese for hawk. They were at this period uninhabited, and without mammals of any kind, except bats and possibly some rodents. The present mammalian fauna is of European introduction. Of some 500 species of plants, more than 400 are also of European origin. Pop. in 1900, 256,474.

Azotus, a town of Palestine. See ESDUD.

A'zov (Russ. pron. á-zov'; anc. Tan'ais), a town of Russia, in a detached part of the government of Yekaterinodar, near the entrance of the Don into the Sea of Azov, 25 miles E. of Taganrog. Pop. in 1897, 27,000.

Azov, Sea of (anc. Pa'rus Mae'otis), a northern arm of the Black Sea, with which it is connected by the Strait of Yenikale or Kertch, nearly enclosed by Russian territory, and forming the peninsula of the Crimea. Its length from SW. to NE. is about 200 miles, its average breadth about 80 miles, and its area about 14,000 sq. m. The N. coast is for the most part bold and craggy; the E. coast is very low; and on the W. the tongue of land called the Arabat cuts off from it the Sivash or Putrid Sea. Its greatest depth is only about 7 fathoms; elsewhere the depth falls as low as 20 and even 10 feet. The water, owing to the heavy discharge of its tributary streams, is but feebly saline, and is in places even potable. It freezes over usually between December and March. Perhaps no body of water of equal extent so abounds with fish. The principal fisheries are along the S. coast. The sturgeon, starlet, and other fish are prepared in large quantities, affording both caviare and isinglass. The extreme W. part, or the Putrid Sea, is, during the greater part of the year, little better than a noxious quagmire. The Strait of Yenikale is about 11 miles long and 4 broad, though the navigable channel never exceeds 1 mile in breadth. A new island was raised in the Sea of Azov in 1814 by volcanic eruption. The chief towns on its shores are Taganrog, Mariupol, Kertch, Berdiansk, and Yenikale.

Lat. 34° 1' N.; lon. 36° 11' E. Its remains comprise three temples, two formed with immense stones, besides numerous columns, altars, and the vestiges of the city walls, 2 to 3 miles in circuit. The great temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected by Antoninus Pius. The substructure on which it was reared, which belongs to a very ancient period, is remarkable for the huge blocks of stone that were used in its construction,—the largest found in any building of the world excepting some of the Inca edifices of Peru,—several measuring upward of 60 feet in length. Baalbek continued to be a place of great importance down to the time of the Moslem invasion; it was sacked by the Saracens A.D. 748, and pillaged by Tamerlane in 1400. The present Baalbek, to the E. of the principal ruins, contains about 2000 inhabitants, and is the seat of a British Syrian mission school.

Bab'ylon (L. Bab'ylon; Gr. Βαβυλών, Babulōn), the ancient capital of the Babylonio-Chaldean Empire. It was situated in an extensive plain, on both sides of the Euphrates. The modern town of Hillah, 60 miles S. of Bagdad, is near its site. The great pyramidal mound at Birs Nimrud is supposed to represent the temple of the wise god Nebo at Borsippa, a northeastern suburb of Babylon. This edifice appears to have been identical with the temple of Belus described by Herodotus. To this vast mound, with its seven stages, the account of the Tower of Babel in Genesis is believed to attach itself. The ruins known as El-Kaer are considered to be the remains of the magnificent palace of Nebuchadnezzar, under whom Babylon was at the height of her splendor. The most prominent of the remaining ruins are those at Mujellibeh, on the river bank, 5 miles from Hillah, and those at Amran-ibn-Alli.

Baden, bâ'den, GRAND DUCHY OF, a state of the German Empire, between lat. 47° 32' and 49° 46' N. and lon. 7° 30' and 9° 50' E., in the angle formed by the Rhine on turning northward at Basel. It is bounded N. by Bavaria and Heesse, E. by Bavaria, Württemberg, and Hohenzollern, S. by Switzerland, and W. by Alsace-Lorraine and Rhenish Bavaria. Area, 5820 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 1,866,584. It is divided into the four administrative districts of Constance, Freiburg, Karlsruhe, and Mannheim. Capital, Karlsruhe. The district about Freiburg, the old Breisgau, was formerly a possession of Austria, and the district about Heidelberg, part of the Rhenish Palatinate. Surface mountainous, covered for four-fifths of its extent by the Black Forest (Schwarzwald), with the contraforts which extend from it. In the S. the Schwarzwald and Odenwald bound the eastern valley of the Rhine, from which they rise abruptly and form a chain of plateaus gradually descending towards the north, and varying from 2000 to 4000 feet in elevation. The culminant points are the Feldberg, 4900 ft.; the Hirszenhorn, 4650 ft.; Belchen, 4640 ft.; Kand, 4075 ft.; the Blauen, 3832 ft.; the Katzenbuckel, summit of the Odenwald, 2055 ft.; and the Kaiserstuhl, an isolated mass of volcanic heights, 1835 ft. (Todenkopf), near Breisach. The western part of the territory is a plain, extending between the Rhine and the mountains from Basel to Mannheim. Principal rivers, the Rhine, which forms the S. and W. boundaries, the Murg, Kinzig, Neckar, and Danube. The Lake of Constance forms part of the SE. frontier. The climate is very mild in the valley of the Rhine, and rigorous in the mountain-districts. The vine is cultivated at an elevation of 1400 feet. The soil is in general very fertile, especially in the valleys of the Rhine and Neckar. Agriculture supplies the chief wealth of the state, and is conducted with skill.

Barley, wheat, maize, potatoes, fine hemp, flax, beets, and tobacco are raised. The cultivation of fruit is extensively carried on. The production of wine is of much importance, and the extensive forests yield fine timber. Mineral products comprise salt from springs, alum, vitriol, sulphur, coal, iron, copper, lead, and a little silver. The duchy is extremely rich in mineral springs, the best known being those of Baden-Baden. The manufactures include cotton goods, ribbons, clocks, jewelry, musical boxes, toys, beet-sugar, chemicals, glass, straw-plait, machinery, paper, and tobacco.

The government is administered by the grand duke, a chamber of peers, and a chamber of deputies. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but the reigning family is Protestant. Baden has two universities, that of Heidelberg (the oldest in the German Empire) and that of Freiburg.

The history of Baden as a state reaches back to the eleventh century, when a petty prince of the house of Zähringen assumed the title of Margrave of Baden. His descendants still rule. For more than two centuries down to 1771 the Badenese territories constituted two states, the margraviate of Baden-Baden and that of Baden-Durlach. In 1806 the ruler assumed the title of grand duke.

Baden, commonly Baden-Baden, bâ'den bâ'den (anc. Civitas Aurelia Aquensis), a town and watering-place in the grand duchy of Baden, in a valley of the Schwarzwald, on the Ohlbach, 18 miles SSW. of Karlsruhe and 6 miles from the Rhine. Its position is 600 feet above the sea. It is overlooked by a castle, a vast ruined edifice of the tenth or eleventh century. The principal buildings are an Evangelical church, a new castle (Neues Schloss), the Russian chapel, and the Anglican church in Norman style, the bathing establishments (Friedrichsbad; Kaiserin-Augusta-Bad, erected in 1891-92), many fine hotels, the Konversations-Haus, art-gallery, and library. There are 20 springs of a saline nature, varying in temperature from 113° to 168°, containing also iron and free carbonic acid. The yield from the main springs is upward of 100,000 gallons per day. This is generally considered the most beautifully situated of all the German watering-places, and is rivalled only in popularity by Wiesbaden. Baffin Bay or Sea, a large gulf in the NE. part of North America, is bounded on the E. by Greenland. It communicates southward with the Atlantic Ocean through Davis Strait, and with the Arctic Ocean by Lancaster Sound (and Jones Sound?) on the W., and by Smith Sound and Robeson and Kennedy channels or straits on the N. It is about 850 miles long, and extends northward as far as 77° 36' N. lat. The greatest width is nearly 400 miles. The greatest depth is probably somewhat over 6000 feet (soundings by Ross of 960 and 919 fathoms; soundings of 2624 fathoms by Ingfield, probably inaccurate). The shores are rocky and precipitous and overlooked by high mountains. This bay was named in honor of William Baffin, who first explored it in 1616. Whales, seals, and polar bears abound in its waters and on its coasts. Baffin Bay is largely an ice-sea, and in winter it is blocked almost solid with sea-ice and icebergs from E. to W. It is occupied by the "middle pack" of the whalers, whose disruption in spring and summer permits of a brief period of fairly safe navigation. Immense icebergs sweep across more particularly its northern parts.

Baganga, bâ-gâng'gâ, a pueblo and bay of the Philippines, on the E. coast of the island of Mindanao.

Bagdad, bâg-dâd' or bag'dad, a city of Asiatic Turkey, capital of the vilayet of the same name, on both banks of the Tigris, 240 miles NW. of its junction with the Euphrates. Lat. 33° 19' N.; lon. 44° 22' E. The city, as seen from a distance, has a striking appearance, being surrounded by formidable-looking walls of brick, strengthened with round towers, above which rise the minarets of numerous mosques. A forest of palm- and date-trees growing around and within the city adds to the picturesque effect. The interior, however, is disappointing, the streets being narrow and crooked and the houses generally of mean construction. Among the fine old structures are "the gate of the talisman," the tomb of Zobeida, the wife of the Caliph Harun-al-Rashid, the tomb of a mediæval Turkish saint, and the building which served as the edifice for its once famous college. Bagdad was for many ages the great emporium of commerce for all the surrounding countries, but it has much declined in recent times. A railway to connect the city with the railway system of Asia Minor is in course of construction. Bagdad has been noted for its manufactures of red and yellow leather, and of a kind of plush, of rich and beautiful patterns, which is used by the Turks for covering cushions and sofas. The climate is intensely hot in summer, but on the whole salubrious, although subject during part of the summer to a hot wind, known by the name of samiel, or simoom. Rain rarely falls later than the beginning of May or earlier than towards the end of September. The estimates of the population of Bagdad range between 100,000 and 200,000, of which number perhaps 15,000 (according to some, many more) are Jews and about 10,000 Latin Christians. The purest Arabic is here spoken and the social life is of the strictest Bedouin type. This city, built out of the ruins of Ctaphon and Seleucia, was founded by the Caliph Al-Mansur about 762, and was the splendid capital of the Abbasside Caliphate until its extinction. It was a great centre of Arabic learning, and one of the most flourishing and populous cities in the world. In 1258 it was sacked by the Mongol ruler Hulaku Khan, who put an end to the Caliphate of Bagdad. It has been held by the Turks since 1638. Bagdad has borne the appellation of Dar-es-Salam, or "City of Peace."

Bagdad, a vilayet or province in the SE. portion of Asiatic Turkey. It is traversed by the Euphrates and Tigris (the territory between which is part of ancient Mesopotamia), and includes part of Al-Jesireh and Irak-Arabi. Area, about 40,000 sq. m. Pop. between 500,000 and 1,000,000.

Bahala Creek, of Mississippi, enters Pearl River in Lawrence co.

Bahama, a post-hamlet of Durham co., N.C.

Bahama (bá-há-má) Banks, two great areas of shoal water among the Bahama Islands. Great Bahama Bank has the Florida Straits (New Bahama Channel) and Santarem Passage on the W., Exuma Sound on the E., and Old Bahama Channel on the S., and is divided into two unequal parts by the Gulf of Providence, which enters it from the N. Most of the large islands of the group are upon it. Little Bahama Bank is N. of the former, contains Abaco and Great Bahama Islands, and is divided from the larger bank by the Providence Channels.

Bahama Channel, or New Bahama Channel, off the coast of Florida. (See FLORIDA STRAITS.) Old Bahama Channel separates the Great Bahama Bank from Cuba.

Bahama Islands, or Lucayos, loo-ki'ooe, a group of about 700 islands or rocky islets, belonging to Great Britain, lying NE. of Cuba and E. of the coast of Florida, the Gulf Stream passing between them and the mainland. They extend from the Mantanita Cays, in lat. 27° 31' N. and lon. 79° 5' W., to the Mouchoir Bank, in lat. 21° N. and lon. 70° 32' W., a distance of upward of 700 miles. Generally speaking, they present a flat appearance, are mostly long and narrow, and are formed of calcareous (largely coral) sand and shell, triturated and distributed by the impounding of the sea and wind-action. The highest point of land is about 410 feet above sea-level. Many of the islets barely rise above the water, while the entire series is disposed about submerged banks whose restricted areas bear testimony to a comparatively recent regional subsidence of some 300 feet. The enclosed and surrounding waters are largely grown with coral, millepore and nullipore reefs, which give a wonderful exhibition of the exuberance of oceanic life. Of the whole group, not more than 31 or 32 are inhabited, and some of the largest are but thinly peopled, while others, again, are mostly unexplored. Though the soil is thin and streams unknown, except on the island of Andros, the islands generally produce oranges, limes, lemons, pineapples, esculent vegetables, maize, cotton, etc. The chief exports are cabinet-woods, sponges, fruit, shells, pearls, salt, arrow-root, etc. The cultivation of the Sisal-fibre plant (Agave Sisalensis) has latterly been encouraged by the government, and a number of fairly flourishing plantations have been established on Abaco and elsewhere. The climate is generally fine; but hurricanes and long droughts occur. From November to May the temperature ranges in a general way between 60° and 75°, and during the balance of the year, or in the warm season, from about 75° to 85°. The general wild vegetation of the Bahamas is a close growth of trees, comprising the madeira, horse-flesh mahogany, croton, lignum-vite, pigeon, alum, dyewoods, etc., with an entangled underbrush of mangrove. In the more southern islands (Turks Islands) there are natural salt-ponds of great value, the cultivation of which is increasing, but is capable of much further improvement.

The seat of government is Nassau, island of New Providence, one of the most important of the group. Here, also, are the head-quarters of the troops. The government consists of a governor and council appointed by the crown, and a house of assembly consisting of 29 members elected by suffrage. Education is under the management of a board of education. The present white inhabitants are chiefly the descendants of American Tories, great numbers of whom repaired to these islands with the remains of their property at the close of the Revolutionary war. The negroes, who are mainly descendants of former slaves, constitute the great bulk of the population, which, in 1901, was put at 53,735 (exclusive of the Turks Islands). Of this number about 15,000 are on the island of New Providence.

One of the Bahama Islands, called by the natives Guanahani, was the first land discovered by Columbus on his first voyage in 1492. This island, which was named by him San Salvador, has been variously identified with Watling's Island (to which the weight of opinion seems to incline), Cat Island, and others of the group. At that period the larger Bahamas were peopled by an inoffensive race of Indians, whom the Spaniards removed to work in mines or act as divers in the pearl-fisheries. By this treatment the race became extinct in the course of about fourteen years. The Bahamas then remained uninhabited for nearly a century and a half, when they were colonized by the English in 1629, who were in turn expelled by the Spaniards. The islands subsequently changed masters repeatedly, but were finally ceded to the British in 1783. The principal islands are Grand Bahama, Great and Little Abaco, Andros Island, New Providence, Eleuthera, Cat Island or Little San Salvador, Great Exuma, Rum Cay, Watling's Island, Long Island, Crooked Island, Acklin Island, Atwood's Key, Mariguana, Great and Little Inagua, etc. Area, about 5400 sq. m.

Bahar, a division and town of India. See BEHAR.

Baharieh, an oasis in the western part of Lower Egypt, in the Libyan Desert.

Bahawalpur, bá-há-wál-pur', or Bhawalpur, a feudatory native state of British India, between the Punjab and Rajputana. Area, 15,000 sq. m. It is level, and in part a desert, less than one-fifth being arable. Capital, Bahawalpur. Pop. in 1901, 720,700, chiefly Mohammedans.

Bahawalpur, capital of the state of Bahawalpur, on a branch of the Sulej, 60 miles S. of Multan and 140 miles NW. of Bikanir. Pop. about 15,000. It is enclosed by gardens and by a mud wall 4 miles in circumference. The houses are meanly constructed of brick. Bahawalpur is famous for its scarfs and turbans, manufactured by Hindus. Lat. 29° 24' N.; lon. 71° 47' E.

Bahia, bá-ee'á, or São Salvador, sôwn' ál-vá-dôn', a city and seaport of Brazil, capital of the state of the same name, beautifully situated in an elevated position on the strip of land forming the E. side of the entrance to All-Saints Bay, immediately within Cape San Antonio, in lat. 13° 0' S., lon. 38° 31' W., 800 miles NNE. of Rio de Janeiro. Bahia is the seat of the primate of the republic. It is the terminus of important railway and telegraph systems. It is composed of two parts, the upper (alta) and lower (baixa), connected by a hydraulic elevator for passengers. There are railways in the principal streets. The upper town stands at an elevation of 200-270 feet above the lower town, and the streets connecting the two parts are consequently very steep. This is the larger, finer, and more populous part of the city. Here the wealthier classes dwell, and here are situated the most important public buildings. On one of the most commanding heights is situated the finely wooded promenade, from which a magnificent view is obtained.

Bahia, as the metropolis of the Brazilian church, exceeds every other city in the republic in the number of its churches, monasteries, and convents. It is abundantly provided with public buildings. The more important are the governor's palace; the archiepiscopal palace, communicating with the cathedral; the mint, court-house, a public and a military hospital, university, orphan seminary, theatre, granary, public library, medical school, normal school, custom-house, arsenal, and various public warehouses.

The harbor is one of the best in America, and is suitable for vessels of any size. The commerce of Bahia, which ranks after Rio de Janeiro as the most important commercial city of Brazil, consists chiefly in the export of sugar, cotton, tobacco, rum, hides, rosewood, coffee, cacao, and tapioca. Nearly 300,000 bags of coffee were shipped from here in 1898.

Bahia de Todos os Santos, or All-Saints Bay, was discovered in 1503 by Americus Vesputius. In 1510, Diego Alvarez Corra began a settlement, which he named São Salvador, subsequently recognized by the Portuguese government as the capital of Brazil and residence of the governor-general, the first one, Thomas de Souza, landing in 1549. It continued to be the capital till 1763, when the viceroyalty was transferred to Rio de Janeiro. The first printing-press was established in 1811, and the first sugar-mill was introduced from England in 1815. The whale-fisheries of this city were once the greatest in the world, and considerable numbers of whales are still caught in the neighboring seas. Pop. in 1873, 128,929; in 1890, 174,412; in 1900, estimated at about 200,000.

Bahia, bâ-ee', a maritime state of Brasil, bounded by Piahy, Pernambuco, Sergipe, Espirito Santo, Minas Geraes, and Goyas. Estimated area, 164,600 sq. m. The state is traversed from S. to N. by a mountain-range under various names,—Almas, Chapada, etc.—at a distance of rather more than 200 miles from the sea, forming the water-shed between the rivers that flow E. to the Atlantic and those that flow W. to the Rio São Francisco, whose northerly course bisects the state. The soil is very productive. The principal agricultural products are sugar, cotton, tobacco, coffee, mandioca, rice, beans, and maize; other products are Brazil-wood, cedar, elemi, copal, and ipêcuanha, also oranges, mangoes, and many other fruits. Diamonds and gold are found in some parts. Pop. in 1890, 1,919,802. This state has the largest negro population in the republic.

Bahia Blanca, bâ-ee' à blân'kâ, an inlet of the Atlantic on the E. coast of Argentina. Lat. 39° S.

Bahia Blanca, a town and port of the Argentine Republic, on the N. coast of the bay of its own name, in lat. 38° 45' S. It is connected by rail with La Plata. Pop. about 7000.

Bahia del Chocó, Colombia. See BUENAVENTURA.

Bahia de Todos os Santos. See ALL-SAINTS BAY.

Bahia Honda, bâ-ee' à on'dâ (i.e., "deep bay"), a town and harbor of Cuba, N. coast, 55 miles WSW. of Havana. Pop. of the town (with Aguacate), about 1300.

Bahlingen, a village of Baden, on the Treisam, NW. of Freiburg. Pop. 2900.

Bahn, bân, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, on the Thue, 23 miles S. of Stettin. Pop. about 3000.

Bahraich, bâ-rîch', a district of Oudh, British India. Its centre is occupied by a plateau, a spur of the sub-Himalaya. Capital, Bahraich.

Bahraich, a town of Oudh, British India, capital of the district of Bahraich, on an affluent of the Gogra, 62 miles NE. of Lucknow. It is a place of great antiquity, and manufactures fireworks and cloth. Pop. about 25,000.

Bahramabad, a town of Persia, in Kerman. Pop. about 15,000 (?).

Bahrain (bâh-râne') or Aval Islands (anc. Ty'loe or Ty'roe), a group in the Persian Gulf, in a bay near the coast of Arabia. They consist of the island of Bahrain, about 30 miles long and 10 miles broad; Moharek, to the N., about 4 miles long; and another small island, besides a few islets, which are mere rocks. Bahrain is traversed by the parallel of 26° N. These islands are famous for their pearl-fisheries, which employ hundreds of boats. The yield in some years exceeds $2,000,000. The Bahrain Islands are governed by an Arab sheik, who is under British protection. The chief seat of commerce is the town of Manama, on the main island, with a population of about 25,000. The seat of government is the town of Moharek, of about the same size. These two towns comprise about half of the population.

Bahr-el-Abiad, bâ'r el à'be-âd (Arab. "white river"), or White Nile, a river of Africa, which issues from Lake Victoria Nyansa, directly under the equator, and supplies the major part of the water to the main Nile. It is hence the true upper Nile, which is joined by the Blue Nile, or Bahr-el-Azrek, at Khartum. Its length is roughly 2300 miles, with a course directed in great part through an almost boundless expanse of overgrown flats and marshes. It receives the Sobat River on the E. and the Bahr-el-Ghazal on the W. See NILE.

Bahr-el-Azrek, bâ'r el âz'rek ("blue river," or rather "dark" or "turbid river"), or Blue Nile, a river of Africa, rises in Abyssinia, near Lake Dembea or Taana (through which it flows), at an elevation of over 7000 feet. It runs southeastward, turns to the right, and describes a large semicircle in the highlands of Abyssinia. Its general direction is northward. It intersects Sennaar, and unites with the Bahr-el-Abiad, or White Nile, at Khartum, in lat. 15° 37' N. Length, about 300 miles. It is an impetuous stream, and carries a large volume of water supplied by periodical rains. It is navigable nearly 600 miles during high water. Its ordinary width varies from 500 to 1000 yards. The fertility of Lower Egypt is almost entirely due to the mud or sediment carried down by the Blue Nile and the Atbara, and it is from the Blue Nile that the great inundating floods proceed. The rise of the waters begins in June and is carried into the first half of October. During this period it has a maximum discharge at the confluence of 220,000 cubic feet per second. Called in Abyssinia Asai.

Bahr-el-Ghazal, bâ'r el gâ-zâl', a western tributary of the White Nile, which it joins in about lat. 9° 25' N. It rises in the Bahr-el-Ghazal region of the Sudan. This river is mainly responsible for the sudd (floating vegetation) of the Nile. Its northern branch is the Bahr-el-Arab.

Bahr-el-Ghazal, at one time thought to be an outlet (or even inlet) of Lake Chad, Africa, but now known to be a periodic lagoon-arm of that water, on the E. side.

Bahr-el-Huleh (questionably identified with "the waters of Merom" of Scripture), a lake of Palestine, traversed by the Jordan, is 11 miles N. of the Sea of Galilee. It is 4 miles long, 34 miles broad, triangular in outline, and in part overgrown with papyrus.

Bahret-el-Atebe, bâ'rét el à-tâ'bâ, a marshy lake of Syria, 15 miles ESE. of Damascus. It receives the Barada River, but has no outlet.

Bahr-Tabariyeh. See TABARIYEH, LAKE OF.

Bahr-Yusuf ("Joseph's Canal," literally "Joseph's River"), a long narrow water-course on the W. side of the Nile, parallel to that river. It leaves the Nile near Melawi-el-Arish and waters the depression of the Fayum.

Baize, the ancient name of BAJA and PAIAS.

Baiaes, a town of Syria. See PAIAS.

Baiburt, bi'boort', a town of Asiatic Turkey, 66 miles WNW. of Erzerum. It is picturesquely situated on the Tchoruk-See and has an imposing old castle. Pop. estimated at 10,000.

Baidland, a post-village of Washington co., Pa.

Baidyabati, bid-yâ-bâ'tee, a town of Bengal, British India, on the Hughli, opposite Barrackpur and 17 miles by rail N. of Calcutta. Pop. about 20,000.

Baie du Febvre, Quebec. See LA BAIE.

Baiern, or Bayern, the German name of BAVARIA.

Baiersbronn, bi'ers-bron', a town of Württemberg, Germany, in the Black Forest region, in the district of Freudenstadt. It has various industries. Pop. in 1900, 6414.

Baiersdorf, bi'ers-dorf', a town of Bavaria, on the Regnitz, 4 miles N. of Erlangen. Pop. about 1300.

Baie St. Paul, a post-village of Charlevoix co., Quebec, Canada, 39 miles from Sainte Anne de Baupré. Pop. in 1901, 1408. Its banking point is Quebec.

Baikal (bi-kâl'), Lake (Mongol, Dalai-Nor,—i.e., "Holy Sea"), the largest lake of Asia (exclusive of the Caspian and Aral seas), situated in the extreme southern part of Siberia, between lat. 51° 28' and 55° 30' N. and lon. 103° 40' and 110° E. It is a crescent-shaped double basin, with a sharp dividing ridge rising up from the bottom to within nearly 200 feet of the surface. Length, from NE. to SW., 375 miles; average breadth, about 37 miles; area, 13,500 sq. m.; height above the sea, 1560 feet. Recent surveys have revealed the prodigious maximum depth of 5618 ft.; the average depth is probably not less than 850 ft. During recent years the waters have fallen considerably, while shore-terraces give evidence to a former high-level which is to-day in no way maintained. Its basin is enclosed by the Baikal Mountains (a spur of the Sayan Altai system), which often rise up precipitously from the shore. Volcanic agency is active throughout the surrounding country. The lake receives numerous affluents, the principal of which are the Upper Angara, Barguzin, and Selenga Rivers, and gives origin to the Lower Angara, the chief head-stream of the Yenisei. It contains several islands, that of Olkhon (famous for its Alpine roses) near the N. coast, being 30 miles in length. Lake Baikal forms a part of the great commercial line of communication between China and Russia, and trade is much facilitated by steamboats. It is reached and skirted on the S. side by the Transiberian railway. Its chief ports and stations are Myssovaya, Kluyevka, and Listvinitohnaya, the last-named being an excellent harbor. The surface is frozen from December to April, but powerful "ice-breakers" have been used towards clearing steamboat passages. Its seal, herring, and sturgeon-fisheries are valuable, and the golomyka (Callionymus Baikalensis), a species of fish, yields a great amount of oil. The Baikal seal (Phoca fetida) appears to be identical with a species from the Arctic Ocean.

Lat. 40° 21' N.; lon. 49° 51' E. The old town of Baku stands on a declivity, the summit of which is crowned by a palace of the former khans; but the marvellous development of the petroleum trade, which has occurred since about 1870, has caused the limits of the place to expand much beyond its former area. Beside the old "white" town, with its spacious mosques, public squares, marts, caravansaries, and Greek and Armenian churches, a "black town" has sprung up, devoted to the refining of petroleum, which is supplied by about 1500 wells in the vicinity, and is piped to the town and prepared for export. The petroleum district of Baku is by far the most productive in the world. The average depth of the wells is about 1000 feet, and the greatest some 600 feet more. The product in 1901 was about 650,000,000 puds, or approximately 50,000,000 barrels. Cotton, silk, opium, saffron, and salt are also exported. In ancient times Baku was held in the highest veneration by the Guebres or Parsees (fire-worshippers), and it is still frequented by thousands of pilgrims, many of whom come from long distances. (See ARSEN-GA.) They still have temples here, and many of them spend their days in worship and in penitential exercises. Baku is the best port on the Caspian Sea, and is largely visited by craft of various kinds. It has ship-building yards and is an important naval station. Pop. in 1879, 15,516; in 1892, 92,601; in 1897, 112,253.

Baljuam, bál'joo-án', a town of Asiatic Russia, in eastern Bokhara, about 300 miles ESE. of the city of Bokhara.

Balkan, bál-kán' (anc. Hæmus), a mountain-chain of Europe, the direct continuation of the southern Carpathians or Transylvanian Alps. It extends southward from the Iron Gates of the Danube as the eastern boundary of Serbia, turns SE. through western Bulgaria, and then eastward as the separating line between Bulgaria and Eastern Rumelia to meet the Black Sea at Eminieh. In a more extended sense, the Balkans are by some geographers made to include the more southern mountains of the peninsula, the Anti-Balkans and the lofty Despot-Dagh (Rhodope Mountains, with the Rilo-Dagh, nearly 10,000 feet). The true Balkans, the Stara-Planina, "old" or "great mountains" of the Bulgarians, are of comparatively youthful construction, and date their uplift from about the Middle Tertiary period, being a part of the great Alpine system of folds. Their steep face is on the south, where the descent into the Sofia and East Rumelian foreland is markedly abrupt. Northward the fall is much more gradual, and in the direction of their eastern termination they flatten out into a plateau-surface (Shumla). The Isker, east of Sofia, is the only stream that penetrates the mountain-buttress, through a wild and narrow gorge. The section of the chain between the passage of the Isker and Shivno is frequently designated the Kodja-Balkan (also Veliki-Balkan), and it contains the loftiest summits of the system,—the Yumruktohal, 7796 feet; Kadimlia, 7478 ft.; Ambarika, 7317 ft. The lower slopes of the mountains are well wooded with oak and other trees and largely planted with the vine, while beautiful meadow and pasture tracts, especially on the southern face, characterize a somewhat rugged middle zone. There is no perpetual snow-cap, but the mountains give distinct evidences of past glaciation. Among the more important passes are the Sveti-Nikolaya (4505 ft.), Dobral (1460 ft.), Baba-Konak (3240 ft.), Troyan (3445 ft.), Demir-Kapu (3600 ft.), and the historically famous Ak-Boas (1400 ft.) and Shipka (4290 ft.).

Balkan Peninsula (so named from the mountain-range of the BALKAN), the easternmost of the three great southern peninsulas of Europe, between the Adriatic and Ionian seas on the W., and the Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, and the Aegean Sea on the E. Strictly speaking, the base of this peninsula is a line drawn from the delta of the Danube to the head of the Adriatic Sea. The area, roughly speaking, is about 200,000 sq. m., or somewhat less than that of the Iberian Peninsula. A part of the territory, however, as thus defined lies outside of the limits of the region conventionally designated as the Balkan Peninsula, the Danube and the lower Save being commonly taken as the base. The Balkan Peninsula, as the designation is regularly used, comprises European Turkey (Thrace, Macedonia, Albania, etc.), Bulgaria (with Eastern Rumelia), Servia, Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina (now virtually a part of Austria-Hungary), Dalmatia (an Austrian crown-land), and Greece. The aggregate population is about 17,000,000, about half of whom are Slavs. With the exception of a long strip along the Danube, included in Bulgaria, nearly the whole of the peninsula is mountainous. In the S. (Greece and Macedonia) the mountain-elevations reach out into the sea in the form of peninsulas, and reappear detached from the mainland in numerous islands. In the NE. are the Balkan Mountains, to the S. of which are the Despot-Dagh (Rhodope Mountains), Rilo-Dagh (nearly 10,000 feet in elevation), and Perin-Dagh. From the shores of the Gulf of Saloniki rises Mount Olympus (nearly 10,000 ft.). On the NE. borders of Albania is the Shar-Dagh (9000 ft. or more). In Greece are the Pindus and other ranges. The mountains of Montenegro rise to a height of over 8000 ft. Servia, Bosnia, and Dalmatia are covered with mountains. The Dinaric Alps extend along the borders of Bosnia and Dalmatia. The largest rivers flowing into the basin of the Danube are the Morava and Drina. The Maritza, Struma, and Vardar are considerable streams emptying into the Aegean Sea. The Balkan Peninsula approaches to within less than half a mile of Asia at the E. end of the Sea of Marmora, where the Bosphorus leads into the Black Sea, and to within about a mile of where the Dardanelles connect the Sea of Marmora with the Aegean Sea. Between 1354 and 1478 the Turks made themselves masters of nearly the whole of the Balkan Peninsula. The disruption of their realm has been going on since the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Balkány, bál'káfi, a village of Hungary, co. of Szabolcs, 7 miles S. of Nagy-Kálló.

Balkash, bál'kash', or Tenghiz, ten'geez', an extensive lake of Asiatic Russia, between lat. 45° and 46° 30' N. and lon. 73° 20' and 79° E. It receives the waters of the Ili and several smaller streams, but has no outlet. Length, from NE. to SW., about 330 miles; greatest breadth, 55 miles. It occupies a position 790 feet above the sea, and is merely a reliet of a former much more extensive sheet of water, of which the Saesyk-Kul and Ala-Kul are also remaining parts. It has been thought to have been a part of the Aralo-Caspian system, but the assumed connection is doubtful. Greatest depth, about 80 feet. The waters, which are fresh, have been rising of late years.

Balkh, báix, a region of Turkestan (the anc. Bactria, in the narrower sense), now subordinate to the Amer of Afghanistan, extending between lat. 35° and 37° N. and lon. 64° and 69° E., having on the N. the Amu-Darya, on the E. Badakhshan, on the S. the Hindu-Kush Mountains, and W. the desert. Length, about 250 miles; breadth, 20 miles. Capital, Tashkurgan.

Balkh (anc. Zariaspa and Bac'tra), a city of the above region, situated on the Balkh River, 105 miles W. of Kunduz. The modern town, although it still bears the name of "Mother of Cities," replacing the capital of the Greco-Bactrian monarchy (which arose in the middle of the third century B.C., and whose dominions ultimately included part of India), is now almost depopulated; it is enclosed by a mud wall and occupies but a fraction of the surface embraced by the ancient city, the remains of which cover a space 20 miles in circumference. Silk-weaving is extensively carried on. Pop. estimated from 8000 to 15,000.

Baltic (baw'l'tik) Sea (Ger. Ostsee, ost'sá, "East Sea," anc. Ma're Suevicum), a sea of Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, and Denmark, and communicating with the North Sea by the sinuous channel consisting of the Skagerrack, Cattegat, the Sound, and the Great and Little Belts. It extends from Swinemünde in the S. to Torné in the N., about 950 miles, and from Stockholm on the W. to St. Petersburg, at the extremity of the Gulf of Finland, on the E., 390 miles. Its area (inclusive of the Cattegat) is 160,000 sq. m.; and its basin, which receives the drainage of nearly a fifth of the surface of Europe, is at least 800,000 sq. m. Notwithstanding its great extent, the Baltic has all the characteristics of a great lake. Its floor is properly an extension of the North Sea plateau, over which there is generally only shallow water, the average depth of the sea being about 28-30 fathoms. The greatest recorded depth, between Stockholm and the island of Gotland, is 1518 feet. No sea has, in proportion to its size, so great an influx of fresh water: hence it contains but little salt; the quantity ranging from about 6 to 10.5 parts per thousand; relatively to the North Sea, it is about as 194 to 373. The N. part of the Baltic is called the Gulf of Bothnia; on the E. are the Gulfs of Finland and Riga, on the SE. the Gulf of Danzig, and on the SW. the Gulf of Lübeck. The Baltic receives the waters of the Motla-Elf, Dal-Elf, Angerman-Elf, Umeå-Elf, Luleå-Elf, Torné-Elf, and other Swedish rivers, lakes Onega, Ladoga, and Peipus, and the Düna, Niemen, Vis-tula, and Oder rivers, besides numerous smaller streams. The great amount of sand and mud carried down by the rivers has considerably raised the bottom of this sea, and closed to navigation the mouths of many of its streams. The shores and bed of the sea have towards the south a well-ascertained downward movement, while in the northern section, or at least in some parts of it, elevation appears to be taking place. The chief islands are the Danish Archipelago, between the coasts of Jutland and Sweden, the islands of Rügen, Bornholm, Öland, Gotland, Dagö, and Osel, the group of Åland, and that of Qvarken. The Baltic has but insignificant tides, the daily differentials being in some parts not observable; at Copenhagen the difference between high and low water is barely one foot. The sea, however, is subject to changes of level, depending on the winds, retarding or accelerating the passage of the water through the Sound and the Belts. Thus, during a NE. wind the SW. portion of the sea is often raised as much as 4 feet above the level of the North Sea. But after NW. gales and during spring tides, the Atlantic rises, and, pouring a flood into the Baltic, commits havoc among the islands of the Danish Archipelago. The great amount of water which flows into the Baltic, especially during the melting of the snow in spring, occasions a general current in the direction of the ocean; and it has been calculated that the number of days in which the water flows outward is in proportion to those in which it flows in an opposite direction as 24 to 1. During winter this sea is usually frozen along the coasts, and in severe winters a great part of its surface is covered with ice. The harbor of Helsingfors is closed during about 139 days of the year, and that of Kronstadt, 163 days. Baltic Port, on the other hand, has but about 35 days of ice-siege. During recent years much success has attended the use of powerful ice-breaking steamers, and the harbors have been kept measurably clear of ice. In 1324 the Baltic was frozen so hard that for six weeks the people travelled between Denmark and Germany on the ice. Periods of excessive freezing were also the winters of 1460, 1658 (when Charles X. of Sweden marched his forces across the Belts), and 1709. The Gulf of Bothnia is frequently completely frozen over. The Baltic contains abundance of fish, and a great quantity of amber is gathered on its S. shores. The most important ports are St. Petersburg, Kronstadt, Abo, Helsingfors, Riga, Libau, Memel, Königsberg, Danzig, Stralsund, Copenhagen, Malmö, Karlskrona, Stockholm, and Gede. The Kaiser-Wilhelm Canal, completed in 1895, and measuring 61 miles in length, unites the Baltic with the North Sea.

Baltimore, baw'l'te-mor or baw'l'te-mor, a small seaport of Ireland, at its S. extremity, co. of Cork, on a small bay, 47 miles SW. of Cork. Lat.  $51^{\circ}29'N.$ ; lon.  $9^{\circ}20'W.$

Baltimore, baw'l'te-mor, a county in the N. part of Maryland, has an area of 656 sq. m. It is bounded on the SE. by Chesapeake Bay, and on the S. and W. by the Patuxent River. It is also drained by Gunpowder River. The surface is diversified by hills, some of which are nearly 800 feet higher than the level of the sea. Among the mineral resources of this county are granite, marble, limestone, soapstone, and iron- and copper-ores. Capital, Towson. Pop. in 1890, 72,909; in 1900, 90,755.

Baltimore, a city, port of entry, and metropolis of Maryland, the sixth city in population of the United States, is on an estuary of the Patuxent River (locally known as "The Basin"), 14 miles from Chesapeake Bay and about 180 miles by ship-channel from the Atlantic. Lat.  $39^{\circ}17'N.$ ; lon.  $76^{\circ}37'W.$  It is on the Baltimore and Ohio, the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, the Baltimore and Annapolis and other railroads, 40 miles NE. of Washington and 96 miles SW. of Philadelphia. Its harbor is spacious and secure and has been deepened artificially to a minimum of 24 feet. The facilities for transfer of freight from the railways to the shipping are excellent, and the city has become one of the leading places of export in the United States, especially for the agricultural products of the West and South. It is built on a succession of eminences and has picturesque surroundings. The principal thoroughfares are Baltimore and Lexington Streets, running E. and W., and Charles Street, running N. and S. Many of the public buildings are noteworthy for size, beauty, and fine situation: among these may be mentioned the Peabody Institute, with a library of about 150,000 volumes; the Roman Catholic cathedral (with a dome 125 feet high), Enoch Pratt Free Library (containing 200,000 volumes), city-hall (with a dome 260 feet high), court-house, federal building, and masonic temple. Among the educational institutions are the Johns Hopkins University, opened in 1876, one of the leading institutions of learning of the United States, with about 700 students; University of Maryland, Bryn Mawr School, Woman's College, Maryland Institute, Baltimore City College, Loyola College, Morgan College, Calvert Hall College, St. Joseph's Academy, St. Mary's Seminary, Notre Dame Institute, etc. The Johns Hopkins Hospital, like the Johns Hopkins University founded upon an endowment of Mr. Johns Hopkins, is in the excellence of its system and perfection of equipment considered to rank with the foremost European institutions of its kind. The nominal centre of the city is occupied by the beautiful Mount Vernon Place, with its stately Washington Monument, a column of white marble 130 feet in height, resting upon a base 35 feet in height, and supporting a colossal statue of Washington. This, with other monuments, has given to Baltimore the name of "Monument City." The city is abundantly provided with charitable institutions and is pre-eminent for the number and beauty of its places of worship. The Roman Catholic archbishop of Baltimore is cardinal and primate of the United States. Druid Hill Park, on the outer limits of the city, is noted for its natural beauty, and covers about 700 acres. Baltimore vies with Philadelphia as a city of homes, each dwelling-house, as a general thing, being occupied by a single family.

The leading industries of Baltimore are the packing of fruits and oysters and the manufacture of clothing, boots, shoes, cotton goods, flour, fertilizers, bricks, machinery, and metallic wares. The canning industry is very extensive, and gives employment to many thousand hands, the annual product being 50,000,000 cans. The cotton-duck mills in and about the city, whose product is the greater part of the sail-duck made in the United States, employ about 6000 hands. In its metal industries the city is very important, and the vast Bessemer steel plant at Sparrow's Point, 9 miles from Baltimore, has a daily capacity of 2000 tons. Ship-building is also carried on.

The export trade of Baltimore, both foreign and coast-wise, is very great. The grain trade with Europe is of first importance; but naval stores, cotton, foods, ores, etc., are also extensively shipped. Steamship lines connect with Liverpool, Bremen, and other European ports, and with the principal domestic ports. The principal railway lines entering Baltimore pass under the city through immense tunnels.

Baltimore was founded in 1729, and incorporated as a city in 1796. The bombardment of Fort M'Henry by the British and the battle of North Point, where the citizens of Baltimore repelled the British attack (1814), were notable events of the war of 1812-15. The construction of the first important line of railway in the United States, the Baltimore and Ohio R., was commenced in Baltimore in 1828. It was about this time that the merchant-vessels known as "Baltimore clippers" became famous throughout the world. Baltimore was visited by a ravaging fire in Feb., 1904, by which property valued at upward of $50,000,000 was destroyed.

In 1770 the population was 13,503; in 1800, 26,514; in 1810, 35,538; in 1820, 62,738; in 1830, 80,625; in 1840, 102,313; in 1850, 169,054; in 1860, 212,418; in 1870, 267,354; in 1880, 332,313; in 1890, 434,439; in 1900, 508,957. The colored population in 1900 numbered 79,739.

It is traversed from SW. to NE. by the Niger, on which are its principal towns,—Segu, Sansanding, Yamina, and Bammaku. The heat is intense. The rainy season lasts from June to November. The Shea or butter-tree, bombax or cotton-tree, baobab, oil-palm, date, tamarind, etc., are indigenous; maize, millet, rice, and cassava yield two crops a year. The Bambaras are negroes of the Mandingo race and tolerably advanced in agriculture; they spin and dye, work in iron and gold, manufacture leather, and carry on trade.

Bam'ber, a hamlet of Ocean co., N.J., on the Tuckerton R., 24 miles N. of Tuckerton.

Bamberg, bām'bērg, a town of Bavaria, Upper Franconia, 33 miles N. of Nuremberg, beautifully situated at the foot of a range clothed with orchards and vineyards, and traversed by the Regnitz, the branches of which divide the town into three districts. The junction with the Ludwigs-Canal, which unites the Main with the Danube, is at this point. Bamberg is one of the finest towns in Bavaria. Among the public buildings of note are the cathedral, a splendid mediæval structure in the Romanesque style and containing, among other interesting monuments, the curious and richly sculptured tomb of Henry II. and his empress, Cunigunda; the church of St. James, founded in 1073; the upper parish church, or St. Mary's, a fine specimen of the pure Gothic architecture of the fourteenth century; the church of St. Martin's, a massive structure; the old Benedictine monastery of St. Michael, now converted into a hospital and a museum; the old palace of the prince-bishops of Bamberg, now a royal palace; the theatre; and the town-hall. The town possesses a royal library containing about 300,000 volumes (including 3000 incunabula) and 4500 manuscripts. It has also an observatory. The manufactures comprise cotton products, tobacco, shoes, metallic wares, furniture, etc., and there are many breweries. Vegetable-gardening is extensively carried on. The prince-bishops of Bamberg ruled the town and the surrounding district down to the beginning of the nineteenth century. Pop. in 1890, 35,815; in 1900, 41,626.

Bamberg, a county in the S. part of South Carolina, formed in 1897 of the E. portion of Barnwell co. Area, 363 sq. m. It is bounded N. by the Edisto River and is intersected by the Little Salkehatchie River. Capital, Bamberg. Pop. in 1900, 17,296.

Bamberg, a banking post-town, capital of Bamberg co., S.C., 75 miles WNW. of Charleston, on the Southern R. It has cotton- and knitting-mills, buggy-factories, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1533.

246 miles from Boston. Lat.  $44^{\circ}48'N.$ ; lon.  $68^{\circ}47'W.$  A bridge about 1300 feet long, crossing the Penobscot River, connects Bangor with Brewer. Bangor is the third city in the state in population, being exceeded only by Portland and Lewiston. It is at the head of navigation on the Penobscot River, which traverses extensive forests of pine, cedar, spruce, and hemlock. Large steamboats and ships can ascend the river to this place, where the tide rises 17 feet. The Kenduskeag River affords abundant water-power, which is employed in numerous mills. Bangor has various foundries with machine-shops, furniture-factories, steam planing-, pulp-, paper- and woollen-mills, boot- and shoe-manufactories, etc. It is after Chicago the greatest depot of lumber in the United States. Bangor is also engaged in foreign commerce, the coast trade, and ship-building. Numerous vessels, principally American, clear from Bangor for foreign ports annually, and several hundred vessels engaged in the coast trade, nearly one-half of which are steamers, enter this port. A dam built across the Penobscot, just above the city, furnishes the great motive-power of its mills. This city is the seat of the Bangor Theological Seminary (Congregational), which was founded in 1816. The Eastern Maine Insane Hospital and the Eastern Maine General Hospital are located here. Pop. in 1840, 8627; in 1890, 19,103; in 1900, 21,850.

Barcelo'na (Sp. pron. ban-thâ-lo'nâ; anc. Bar'cino), a seaport town of Spain, capital of the province of the same name and seat of the captain-general of Catalonia, 312 miles ENE. of Madrid. Lat. (mole light) 41° 23' 36" N.; lon. 2° 11' E. Barcelona is the most active, commercially important, and, after Madrid, the most imposing city of the kingdom. It is the terminus of several railways, and has of late years grown considerably, its N. portion, the new town, being regularly and handsomely built; in the old town the streets are irregular and narrow. To the E. of the city and S. of the citadel is the extensive suburb of Barceloneta, laid out with great regularity, built chiefly of brick, and occupied by sailors and other seafaring people. Many of the houses of Barcelona itself are also of brick, but most of them, particularly in the new town, are of hewn stone and of an imposing appearance. In recent times great improvements have been made; gas and electric illumination have been introduced, and extensive sewers constructed; fountains of the finest water are found in every quarter, and there are several lines of electric railway. The focus of the busy life of the city is the Rambles, a charming promenade of the old town which it unites with the new, and which contains the principal theatres, some elegant shops and cafés, etc., and is in part given over to the floral display of the Barcelona flower-girls. The principal public edifice is the cathedral, which stands in the highest part of the old town. Its origin dates from the first ages of Christianity, but its present form of Gothic architecture appears to belong to the end of the thirteenth century. It is one of the noblest creations of Spanish Gothic art, and bears two transeptal towers, 170 feet high. There are numerous other churches, several of them ancient and handsome. One of the most remarkable buildings of Barcelona is the Casa de la Diputación, where the cortes of the province used to hold their sittings. Other noteworthy edifices are the Casa Lonja, or exchange, the Casa Consistorial, and the Estruch museum. The Teatro del Liceo is one of the largest theatres of Europe, having seating accommodation for 3600 persons. The principal educational establishment is the university, which is attended by about 2500 students, and has a library of over 150,000 volumes. It has a full faculty, and special schools for architects and engineers. Theological education is given in the Seminario. Charitable and beneficent institutions are numerous. Among other institutions may be mentioned several public libraries and museums, the Academy of Belles-Lettres, the Royal Academy of Arts and Sciences, etc. Of its monuments that dedicated to Columbus, and erected in 1882-90, with a column rising to 200 feet, stands foremost.

Barcelona is the seat of various manufactures, the principal of which are cottons, silks, woollens, paper, leather, and glass. Other chief exports are iron, copper, fire-arms, cork, fruit, salt, wines, and brandies. The development of its textile industries has frequently given to the city the name of "Manchester of Spain." The main part of the trading is coasting. The port of the city is commodious, covering 290 acres, with a depth of water of 25-50 feet, and protected by two massive moles. Its main axis is over a mile in length. The climate of the city is singularly mild and pleasant, with an average temperature for the year of about 61°, for August, 77°, and for January, 48°.

Barcelona is said to have been founded by the Carthaginians under Hamilcar Barca; hence its name. After the fall of Carthage the Romans first became its masters, then the Goths, who possessed it, with the rest of Catalonia, till the year 714, when it was conquered by the Saracens, who held it for nearly a century. It afterwards rose to considerable power under its counts, and, with Catalonia, was annexed to Aragon in 1161. Pop. in 1877, 248,943; in 1887, 273,481; in 1900, as a commune, inclusive of the closely attached suburbs, Gracia, San Martin, Sans, San Andres, San Gervasio, Horta, and Las Cortes, 533,000.

Barcelona, a fertile province of Spain, in Catalonia, reaching from the Mediterranean northwestward to the Pyrenees. It is generally mountainous, being traversed by off-shoots of the Pyrenees. Lat. 47° 34' N.; lon. 7° 36' E. Basel was formerly a walled town, but the old walls and moats have been replaced by modern promenades, and but few of the ancient gates remain; of these the handsomest is the Spalen-Thor, erected about 1400. The cathedral, whose foundation is ascribed to Emperor Henry II., in 1010-1019, is one of the finest churches in Switzerland. The university, founded in 1459, by Pope Pius II., and reorganized in 1817, was the first great seminary of learning established in Switzerland. It had, in 1900, 103 professors and docents, and was attended by about 500 students. With the university are associated a botanical institute and garden. The university library contains upward of 240,000 volumes. Among other notable buildings and institutions may be mentioned the museum, with collections of paintings (of Holbein, the younger, and other masters) and natural history, the Rathaus, historical museum, Kunsthalle, zoological garden, etc. As a commercial and manufacturing town Basel is the most important in Switzerland. Its ribbon-manufactories are most extensive, and give employment to 8000 workers; and it also produces linen, paper, silks, gloves, leather, jewelry, printed cottons, and turnery ware. A peculiar honey-cake, the Baseler-Leckerli, is well known throughout the land. Pop. in 1888, 69,899; in 1900, 109,169. The inhabitants are mainly of German origin. Bavaria (Ger. Bayern or Baiern, bi'ern; L. Bavaria), a kingdom of south Germany, the largest state in the empire after Prussia. It consists of two portions separated by Hesse and Baden. The eastern or main portion is bounded on the N. by the Prussian province of Hesse-Nassau and Thuringia, on the NE. by Saxony and Bohemia, on the SE. by Upper Austria and the Austrian province of Salzburg, on the S. by Tyrol, and on the W. by Württemberg, Baden, and Hesse. Lat. 47° 16'-50° 33' N.; lon. 8° 59'-13° 50' E. The western portion, called the Palatinate of the Rhine, is bounded on the E. by the river Rhine, and on other sides by Alsace-Lorraine, Prussia, and Hesse. Total area, 29,292 sq. m. Pop. in 1890, 5,589,382; in 1900, 6,168,392. More than two-thirds of the inhabitants are Catholics. The Protestants predominate in the Palatinate. Capital, Munich.

The surface is mostly mountainous and hilly, a range of mountains, called the Böhmerwald (contiguous to which on the SW. is the Bayrischer Wald or Bavarian Forest), extending along the NE. frontier, and the southern part being occupied by higher mountains, which belong to the system of the Alps. The latter culminate in the Zugspitze, 9725 feet, the highest summit of Germany. In the N. there is a low range called Fichtelgebirge, which, in the Schneeberg, rises to 3454 feet. The Franconian Jura occupies much of the central region of the country. The mountains are extensively covered with forests of good timber. The principal rivers of the main portion of Bavaria are the Danube, the Main, the Inn, the Salza, the Iller, and the Isar. The portion of the Danube which is within the limits of this kingdom is navigable for steamers. The Danube and the Main, which is also navigable, are connected by the Ludwig's Canal. Numerous lakes are found among the mountains of southern Bavaria, among which are the Chiemsee, Ammersee, and Königssee.

The climate of Bavaria is temperate and healthy, but the winter is severe in the more elevated regions. The mean annual temperature of the lower districts is about 47°, and that of the higher, 40°. The soil is generally fertile, especially in the valley of the Danube, and the mountain-sides produce good pasture. Forests cover more than one-fourth of the total area of the kingdom. The people are mostly employed in agriculture and the breeding of cattle. The staple products are rye, oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, hops, pulse, flax, and wine. The waters abound in fish. Iron, coal, and salt are the most important mineral products. Bavaria is famous for its beer, the breweries being numbered by thousands. Among the important manufactures are those of textiles, machinery, iron- and wooden-ware, pencils, sewing-machines, locomotives, porcelain, and toys. The graphic and polygraphic arts are far advanced. The largest cities are Munich, Nuremberg, Augsburg, Würzburg, and Fürtch. Bavaria has three universities,—at Munich, Würzburg, and Erlangen.

Bavaria is a constitutional monarchy. The throne is hereditary in the male line. The legislative power is exercised by a parliament of two houses, the upper house being composed partly of princes of the blood royal and the heads of noble families. The kingdom is divided into eight so-called government districts, viz.: Upper Bavaria, Lower Bavaria, Palatinate, Upper Palatinate, Upper Franconia, Middle Franconia, Lower Franconia, Swabia. Bavaria has six votes in the federal council of the German Empire.

History.—The history of Bavaria as a duchy reaches back almost to the beginning of the Middle Ages. In 788 the country became part of Charlemagne's realm. Bavaria was one of the great duchies of the old German Empire. The rule of the present dynasty of Wittelsbach dates from 1180. In 1623, Duke Maximilian I. was invested with the dignity of imperial elector. The Upper Palatinate was added to his possessions. In 1777, Bavaria and the Palatinate of the Rhine were united. At the beginning of the nineteenth century, Würzburg, Bamberg, Augsburg, Nuremberg, and Bayreuth were incorporated in Bavaria. In 1806 the elector, who had been an ally of Napoleon in the war of 1805, was allowed to assume the royal dignity. In 1871 the kingdom became one of the states of the new German Empire.

Belfort, bél-for', or Béfort, bá'for', a town of France, in the so-called Territory of Belfort (area, 235 sq. m.), a fragment of the former department of Haut-Rhin, left in possession of France at the cession of Alsace to Germany in 1871. It is situated on the Savoureuse, in a depression between the Vosges and the Jura, called the Trouée de Belfort, 35 miles W. by N. of Basel. It was ceded to France by Austria in the Peace of Westphalia in 1648. It was fortified by Vauban, the citadel constructed by him still towering above the town. In the war of 1870-71 it withstood a siege by the Germans for more than three months, holding out until Feb. 16, more than two weeks after the capitulation of Paris. The place was restored to France in the Peace of Frankfurt, and has since been converted into an almost impregnable frontier fortress. Pop. of the town in 1901, 25,398; of the commune, 32,567; of the territory, 92,304.

Belgium, bél'je-úm or bél'jüm (Fr. La Belgique, lá bál'sheek'; Ger. Belgien, bél'ghe-én; anciently a part of Gallia Belgica, so named from the tribe of the Belgæ), a kingdom of western Europe, bounded on the N. by the Netherlands, on the E. by Luxemburg, Rhenish Prussia, and the Netherlands, on the S. and SW. by France, and on the NW. by the North Sea. It lies between lat. 49° 30' and 51° 30' N. and lon. 2° 32' and 6° 7' E. Its greatest length, on a line drawn from Ostend to Arlon, is 174 miles. Area, 11,373 sq. m. It is divided into 9 provinces.—Antwerp, Brabant, East Flanders, West Flanders, Hainaut, Liège, Limbourg, Luxembourg, and Namur. Capital, Brussels. Pop. in 1900, 6,815,064.

The surface of Belgium is mostly level, but in some parts is diversified by hills, the most elevated of which are about 2900 feet above the sea and are in the southeastern provinces of Liège, Luxembourg, and Namur. The highest point of land is the Baraque Michel, of the Hohe Venn group, near Spa, close to the Prussian frontier, 2200 feet. A part of the Ardennes extends from France into Belgium, and separates the basin of the Meuse from that of the Scheldt. These highlands are mostly covered with dense forests. The plains bordering on the sea are flat, and so low that they require dikes to protect them from inundation. The climate is temperate, and similar to that of England, but is a little colder in winter and hotter in summer. The mean annual temperature of Brussels is 50.6° Fahr., which is approximately the temperature for the country at large. The principal rivers are the Meuse, Scheldt, Sambre, Demer, Dender, Dyle, Lys, Dommel, Ourthe, and Rupel. The Scheldt is navigable for about 100 miles from its mouth, and the Meuse is also navigable from its mouth to the point where it enters the kingdom. The inland navigation is facilitated by canals.

Belgium is rich in minerals, especially coal, iron, calamine (zinc), lead, manganese, and marble. The coal-fields of Hainaut are among the most productive in Europe and employ an army of miners. The Belgians are noted for their skill in rural economy, and a large part of their country is cultivated like a garden, the holdings being generally extremely small. Among the chief products of the soil are wheat, rye, oats, flax, hemp, beets, hops, potatoes, beans, and tobacco. Cattle and horses form an important part of the wealth of the farmers. Belgium has extensive manufactures of cotton, linen, cutlery, carpets, machinery, paper, woollen cloth, glass, etc. The fine linen of Flanders, the lace of Brabant, and the carpets of Brussels have a world-wide reputation. The country is favorably situated for commerce. Antwerp was at the close of the Middle Ages the most important commercial city in Europe, and in recent times it has again taken its place as a great emporium of commerce.

Belgium is the most densely populated country of Europe, having over 600 inhabitants to the square mile. The population is composed mainly of Flemings, who are of Germanic race, and Walloons, who are of Celtic stock. The Flemings, who are the most numerous, speak the Flemish language, closely resembling the Dutch, but the educated Belgians generally speak French, which is the official language of the court. The Walloons speak a dialect or corrupt form of French. The predominant religion of the kingdom is Roman Catholic, the number of Protestants being only about 10,000, and that of the Jews about 4000. The chief cities are Brussels, Antwerp, Liège, Ghent, Mechlin, Verviers, Bruges, Louvain, Seraing, Tournai, Courtrai, Namur, and Ostend. Belgium has universities at Ghent, Brussels, Louvain, and Liège.

The government is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy. The succession is in the direct male line in the order of primogeniture, to the exclusion of females. The legislative power is vested in the senate, whose members are elected partly directly and partly indirectly, and the chamber of representatives. The principle of minority representation has been established.

The territory now forming the kingdom of Belgium was in the Middle Ages divided among a number of states. The cities of Flanders vied with the Italian republics in their industry and trade, and modern art had its birth here almost as early as in Italy. By the middle of the fifteenth century the various states of the Netherlands (Dutch and Belgian) had come under the sway of the dukes of Burgundy. Early in the sixteenth century this great Burgundian realm was united with Spain, from whose rule the Dutch Netherlands, in the course of the next hundred years, emancipated themselves. The Belgian Netherlands were ceded by Spain to Austria in 1713. They were annexed to France in the wars of the Revolution, but in 1814 the allies united Belgium and Holland into a kingdom called the Netherlands. The religion, language, and habits of the Belgians rendering them averse to a union with the Dutch, they revolted in 1830 and declared Belgium an independent state. On the 4th of June, 1831, Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg was elected King of Belgium. The Dutch sought to maintain their hold upon the country by force of arms, but the intervention of France and England finally compelled them to desist from hostilities. The territory of Belgium is held neutral by an agreement between the Great Powers. The Congo Free State is under the sovereignty of the king of the Belgians.

Belgium, a post-village of Onondaga co., N.Y., on Seneca River, 10 miles NW. of Syracuse. Pop. 300.

Belgrade, bél'grád', or Belgrad, bél-grád (anc. Singidunum; Serb. Beograd, "white town"), the capital of Servia, on the right bank of the Danube, at the confluence of the Save, just below Semlin, in Austria-Hungary. Lat. 44° 48' N.; lon. 20° 28' E. Extensive fortifications extend back from the two rivers to the brow of a ridge about 150 feet high. The city has lost its former semi-oriental appearance. The old Turkish quarters have disappeared, and only a single Mohammedan place of worship remains in a fair state of preservation. There are extensive sections with broad spacious streets and modern edifices, and there are quarters with beautiful villas and gardens. A modern system of water-supply has been introduced, and an electric tramway leads to the royal park in the outskirts of the city. The royal high school is on the level of a university, but lacking the medical faculty. The Academy of Sciences possesses the National Library, containing about 100,000 volumes, as well as the National Museum.

The manufactures of Belgrade are still in their infancy, but its commerce is extensive, as it is the great outlet of the products of Servia, and receives the bulk of the foreign imports, mainly from Austria-Hungary. In addition to a number of political journals there are several periodicals devoted to technology, literature, and art. The climate of Belgrade is very changeable. The range of temperature is about the same as in the city of New York, the mercury sometimes rising to 100°, and at times falling below zero.

The military experiences of Belgrade have rendered it famous in history. It was long an object of fierce contention between the Hungarians and the Turks. It was besieged by the latter in 1456, when John Hunyadi achieved a signal victory over them in front of its walls, and again, with success, in 1522, from which time it was held by them till 1688, when it was taken by the Imperialists. Two years afterwards it was again captured by the Turks. In 1717 it was besieged by Prince Eugene and taken after a brilliant victory over a relieving army. In 1739 the Turks made a vain attempt to retake Belgrade, but soon after came into possession of it by treaty, retaining it till 1789, when it was taken by the Austrians, who restored it to the Turks in 1791. The Turkish garrison was withdrawn in 1867. Pop. in 1891, 54,458; in 1896, 59,115; in 1900, 69,097.

Beluchistan, bel-oo'chis-tán', or Baluchistan (in part the anc. Gedrosia), a country of Asia, in the main occupying the position of a British protectorate and in part directly subject to England, bounded on the N. by Afghanistan and the Northwest Frontier Province (of British India), on the E. by the Punjab and Sindh, on the S. by the Arabian Sea, on the W. by Persia. It lies mainly between lat.  $25^{\circ}$  and  $32^{\circ}$  N. and lon.  $61^{\circ}$  and  $70^{\circ}$  E. The area is 132,000 sq. m. The whole region, although portions of it are altogether independent, is officially included in the Empire of India. Beluchistan is for the most part a region of plateaus, mountains, and elevated valleys. In the NE. the Suleiman Mountains, consisting of a number of ranges, with mainly a N. and S. trend, attain an elevation of about 15,000 feet. In the E. are the Hala Mountains, extending N. and S. In the S. are mountain-ranges running E. and W. parallel with the coast. There are extensive plains in the NW. The Bolan and Mula passes are the gates of approach to Afghanistan from the SE. The rivers of Beluchistan are unimportant, although some are of considerable length. Many of them lose themselves through absorption into the ground and evaporation. The principal streams emptying into the Arabian Sea are, from W. to E., the Desht, Hingol, Puruli, and Hab. The greater part of Beluchistan consists of deserts, owing to lack of water. The summer heat in some sections, especially in Mekran, on the coast, is barely equalled anywhere on the globe. In the elevated regions the cold is very severe. The soil is naturally fertile, and the well-watered valleys yield crops of wheat, maize, rice, and pulse, and the fruits of central Europe and the Mediterranean region in endless variety. Cotton, tobacco, indigo, and sugar are also raised, and the date-palm grows in Mekran. The carnivorous animals include the tiger, leopard, hyena, wolf, jackal, fox, and ichneumon. Antelopes, wild asses, wild sheep, Besoar goats, and hares abound. The minerals found in the region include gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, tin, antimony, sulphur, alum, saltpetre, and sal-ammoniac. The mineral products, however, are turned to little account. Many sheep and goats are reared, while large horned cattle are few in number. The camel is the ordinary beast of burden. The population of Beluchistan consists mainly of Beluchis, Brahuis, and Afghans. The Beluchis belong to the Iranian stock and speak the Beluchi language. The Brahuis are supposed by some to belong to the Dravidian stock. They are the dominant race in the country. The Beluchis, who are tall and well formed, are largely nomadic and addicted to rapine. They are indolent, greedy, and cruel. The Brahuis are much shorter and broader than the Beluchis, and are a robust-looking people. Both races are hospitable, brave, and capable of enduring fatigue. Both Beluchis and Brahuis are Sunni Mohammedans. Neither possesses a written language. All the Beluchis are excellent marksmen. The bulk of Beluchistan is divided among a number of chiefs, chosen by the people, who in general owe allegiance to the khan of Kelat. The khan is a subsidized vassal of the British, the India government exercising control over him. The principal divisions of Beluchistan (exclusive of the British portion) are Sarawan in the N., Kelat and Cutch-Gundava in the NE., Jhalawan in the E., Lus (Lao) Bela (a state practically independent of the khan of Kelat) in the SE., and Mekran in the S. Among the chief towns are Kelat, Quetta (an important military post of the British), Mastang, Bagh, Bela, Gundava, Nushki, Dadar, Dera Bugti, and Sunmiani (on the coast). The supremacy of the Brahui khans of Kelat was established about two centuries ago. The British protectorate dates from 1876. The NE. part of Beluchistan, a territory comprising nearly 46,000 sq. m., on the avenue of approach to Afghanistan from the Indus, is held directly by the British or administered by them in the name of the khan of Kelat. The Chief-Commissioner of British Beluchistan is agent to the Governor-General of India. The British have constructed about 550 miles of railway in Beluchistan. Pop. of the whole of Beluchistan in 1901, about 1,050,000; of the districts under British administration, 308,000.

Benevento, bēn-ā-vēn'to (anc. Beneventum), a city of Italy, capital of a province, is situated near the confluence of the Calore and Sabato, 39 miles ENE. of Naples. It is built in great part out of the ruins of the ancient town, and hardly another Italian city can boast of so many remains of antiquity. The Arch of Trajan, now the Porta Aurea, is still nearly perfect. The chief modern buildings are a cathedral, town-hall, diocesan school and library, and several palaces. The town has been the seat of an archbishop since the tenth century. Under the Lombards, Benevento was the capital of a powerful duchy. It became a papal possession in the eleventh century. Near this place Pyrrhus was vanquished by the Romans in 275 B.C., and Charles of Anjou overthrew Manfred, king of Sicily, in 1266. Pop. in 1901, 17,603; of the commune, 24,647.

Bengal, ben-gaw'l (anc. Bengala, bēn-gā'lā), called also Lower Bengal, to distinguish it from the former presidency of the same name, a lieutenant-governorship, the most populous of the eight main divisions of British India, consisting of the old provinces of Bengal, Behar, Orissa, and Chota-Nagpur. The term "presidency of Bengal," still in popular use, includes also the United Prov-innes of Agra and Oudh, the Punjab, and Assam. Bengal has an area of 151,185 sq. m. It is bounded N. by Nepal, Bhutan, and Assam, E. by Assam and Burma, S. by the Bay of Bengal, SW. by Madras and the Central Provinces, and W. by Central India and the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. The Himalayas stretch along the N. boundary. It is traversed by the rivers Ganges, Brahmaputra, and Mahanuddy, with their many tributaries and offshoots; and numerous canals and railways facilitate internal communication. There is every variety of soil. The inarable mountains of the frontiers, and the occasional sand-wastes, cover but a relatively small area, and the greater part of the land is an alluvial plain of the richest description, although portions of the Ganges delta are but densely-wooded swampy jungles. The leading industries are agricultural. Rice, wheat, and other grains, opium, indigo, lac, betel, silk, jute, sugar, cotton, Peruvian bark, tea, flax, oil-seeds, ginger, pepper, and turmeric are extensively produced. The elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, panther, species of wild oxen, antelopes, deer, and the buffalo are part of the indigenous fauna. The apes are numerous in the forest tracts and about many of the cultivated clearings, and the havoc caused by poisonous serpents is appalling. The river-fisheries are extensive. Coal is quite largely mined, and there are mines of iron and copper.

The climate is emphatically tropical, although more than one-half of the region lies beyond the torrid belt. The mean annual temperature ranges in the lowlands from about 77° to 81°, and there is a heavy rainfall—50 inches, and considerably over in some parts. The inhabitants of Bengal are of many races and tribes, but the prominent peoples are of more or less pure Aryan descent, and the principal spoken languages (Bengali, Hindustani, and Uriya) are Indo-European; but along the eastern and northern frontiers are hill-tribes allied in language to the people of Indo-China and of Tibet; and in the W. and SW. are many aboriginal and little-civilized peoples of Kolarian and Dravidian stock. Two-thirds of the people are of the Hindu faith; and of the remainder the large majority are Sunni Mohammedans. Christianity has made more progress in the wild aboriginal tribes than among the more civilized peoples. The legislative council consists partly of natives, many of whom are employed in the government service. The people generally are very poor; but the country, with an apparently light rate of taxation, affords a large revenue. Bengal is exceedingly populous; and some of the worst famines and pestilences ever known have had their seat in these regions. The chief manufactures, until recently, have been of domestic character; but mats, rope, gunny-bags, oil, etc., have been long produced in large amounts, and, with hides, salt-petre, rice, opium, jute, linseed, lac, and indigo, are leading articles of export. Pop. in 1901, 78,448,735. The capital, largest city, and great commercial centre is Calcutta, which is also the capital of the empire of India. The next largest city is Patna. In addition to the territory directly under British rule, Bengal comprises a number of feudatory native states, having an area of 38,650 sq. m. and a population (1901) of about 3,750,000.

BENGAL PROPER, or the province of Bengal, the eastern portion of the above region, has more than one-half of the total population, and nearly one-half of the whole area. According to the original usage, only the country between Bhagalpur and the sea was called Bengal. Area of the province, 70,184 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 41,259,982. The East India Company established a so-called factory at Fort William (Calcutta) in 1686. In 1765 the Great Mogul ceded to the company the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa.

Bering Sea, or Sea of Kamtchatka, is that part of the North Pacific Ocean between the Aleutian Islands, in lat. 52° N., and Bering Strait, in lat. 66° N., by which latter it communicates with the Arctic Ocean. It has on its W. side Siberia (with Kamtchatka) and on its E. Alaska. It contains several large islands, and receives the Anadyr, Yukon, and other large rivers. Fogs are largely prevalent in this sea, which is in general shallow with a muddy bottom. The sea is largely encumbered with ice, and the northern portion is usually closed to navigation by November. Pack-ice extends southward to about lat. 60° beyond which it is continued by fices, the disruption of which permits of navigation in the early part of May; Bering Strait is ordinarily reached in the third week of June. A current of 2-3 knots an hour sweeps outward through the strait and follows the trend of the Siberian coast.

Bering Strait, the channel which separates Asia and America at their nearest approach to each other, and connects the Arctic with the Pacific Ocean. Between Cape Deshnev or East Cape (Asia), lat. 66° 6' N., lon. 169° 38' W., and Cape Prince of Wales (Alaska), lat. 65° 46' N., lon. 168° 15' W., it is 54 miles across. Its depth in the middle is about 50-45 fathoms. It was discovered by Deshnev (Deshneff) in 1648, and was named in honor of Vitus Bering, who sailed into it in 1728, and who was formerly considered its discoverer. It contains the Diomed Islands.

Lat. 52° 30' 17" N.; lon. 13° 23' 54" E. Elevation above the sea, 115 feet. Mean temperature of the year, 48.2°; July, 66.7°; January, 32.8°. Berlin is by far the largest city in Germany, and for the beauty and size of its buildings, the regularity of its streets, the importance of its institutions of science and art, and its activity, industry, and trade, is one of the most imposing of European cities. It is seemingly the greatest manufacturing town of the continent. The city, which now occupies the whole width of the valley of the Spree, covers an area of about 25 sq. m., and is divided into upward of 350 municipal and 100 police districts. Its heart or core is constituted by Alt-Berlin (Old Berlin), Alt-Köln (on an island in the river), and Friedrichswerder, which were formerly enclosed by fortifications. An outer zone to this, bounded until 1868 by the town-walls of the eighteenth century, is formed by the districts of Dorotheenstadt, Friedrichstadt, Luisenstadt, Friedrich-Wilhelmstadt, Königsstadt, and the Spandau and Stralau quarters. Of the outermost zone, largely of suburbs, the better known districts are those of the Tiergarten, the Lower and Upper Friedrichstadt, Outer Luisenstadt, Moabit, and the Tempelhof, Schöneberg, Oranienburg, and Rosenthal quarters. Berlin is in architectural aspect a distinctly modern city, containing many imposing and monumental edifices and presenting a wealthy display of private residences. The busiest concourse of the city, with which many historical events are associated, is the celebrated Unter den Linden, a broad and imposing boulevard, about a mile in length and 196 feet in width, lined with rows of lime- and chestnut-trees. It is flanked by handsome shops and mansions, and terminated at one end by the royal palace and at the other by the Brandenburg Gate. The latter, which forms the entrance to the city from the Tiergarten, was erected in 1789-93 after the pattern of the Propylæa at Athens, and measures 205 feet in width, with a height of 85 feet. It is surmounted by a Quadriga of Victory (by Schadow), which was taken to Paris by Napoleon in 1807, but returned in 1814. As chief ornament of the Linden-avenue is the equestrian statue of Frederick the Great, a masterly work by Rauch, erected in 1851. Among other streets most worthy of notice are the Friedrichstrasse, Potsdamerstrasse, Wilhelmstrasse, and Leipzigerstrasse. The most beautiful squares are the Opernplatz, Königsplatz, Belle-Allianceplatz, and Lustgarten. Prominent public buildings are the royal palace or Schloss, a quadrangular pile, 650 feet in length and 380 feet in width; the Reichstagsgebäude (a vast structure in the style of the Italian Renaissance, erected in 1884-94 at a cost of 22,000,000 marks), the university, the Old and New Museums (containing rare treasures in painting, sculpture, and antiquities), the National Gallery, the new cathedral (1894-1902), the exchange, royal opera-house, Schauspielhaus (royal theatre), arsenal (with its military museum and "hall of fame"), industrial museum, Hohenzollern Museum, and the building of the General Staff. The Tiergarten, the great pleasure-ground of the Berliners, is a magnificent park of over 600 acres. Berlin has numerous splendid public monuments. Among them the "Monument to Victory" (Siegesdenkmal), inaugurated in Sept., 1873, and commemorating triumphs of the German arms in Denmark (1864), Austria (1866), and France (1870-71), occupies the first place. It stands on the Königsplatz, which is approached from the S. by the Siegesallee, or Avenue of Victory, leading through the Tiergarten and bordered with 32 marble groups, representing the rulers of Brandenburg and Prussia. The national monument to Emperor William I. (1897), on the site of the former Schlossfreiheit, is also an imposing sculptural work. The celebrated bronze of the Great Elector (1763) stands on the Kurfürstenbrücke, one of the numerous bridges that cross the Spree and its branches. The Stadtbahn, a splendid example of an elevated railway structure, and the Ringbahn, which makes a complete circuit of the city, in conjunction with a vast system of tramways and omnibuses, afford ready access to all parts of the city. Small steamboats also ply on the Spree (and Havel), connecting the inner quarters with numerous suburbs. Berlin is the greatest centre of intellectual development in Germany. The university, founded in 1809, had, in 1903-04, 7154 students and 6628 "hearers," and a teaching corps of about 500. There are in the city numerous special technical schools and academies of military science, artillery, military engineering, architecture, sculpture, painting, music, etc. It has extensive public libraries, among which the royal library, founded in 1659, has 1,000,000 printed volumes and 30,000 MSS. The city's celebrated academic institutions comprise the academy of sciences, academy of fine arts, academy for the encouragement of industry, academy of music, geographical society (founded in 1838), geological institution, meteorological institute, academy for Oriental studies, etc. The natural history collections and those of the ethnographical museum are among the most important of their kind in Europe. The zoological garden, opened in 1844, ranks with the best in the world. Berlin is the first city in Germany for the variety and importance of its manufactured products. The different articles of industry are cloths, linens, carpets, silks, ribbons, and printed cottons, iron-ware, especially the beautiful cast-iron articles called "Berlin jewelry," paper, porcelain, mathematical and optical instruments, chemical and dye-stuffs, lamps, works of art in bronze, musical instruments, cigars, perfumery, etc. Among its great industrial establishments are the royal iron-foundry and royal porcelain manufactory. The iron and machine industries are developed on a gigantic scale, and applied to the construction of engines, general machinery, locomotives, electrical appliances, munitions of war, etc. Berlin now vies with Leipzig in the magnitude of its book-publishing business. The productions of the press in cartography and lithography are numerous and excellent. The royal bank, established 1773, has been since 1871 the Imperial German Reichsbank.

Two centuries ago Berlin was a place of little importance. It was confined to the immediate bank of the Spree and the island which divides its channel, and consisted of Köln and Old Berlin. The first important improvement was made by the great elector Frederick William, who planted the Unter den Linden. Frederick the Great made the city worthy of his extended dominions. In 1871, Berlin became the capital of the German empire; its growth since that time has been marvellous. Pop. in 1740, 90,000; in 1840, 331,895; in 1875, 966,868; in 1880, 1,122,300; in 1885, 1,315,412; in 1890, 1,574,585; in 1900, 1,894,161.

Bermuda (or Somers) Islands, or The Bermudas, bér-mú'das, a group of islands in the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Great Britain, 580 miles SE. of Cape Hatteras; situated between (about) lat. 32° 14' and 32° 25' N. and lon. 64° 38' and 64° 52' W. They lie SW. and NE., based on the edge of a coral bank, and only occupy a space of about 18 miles by 6, though said to be 300-360 in number. They are separated from one another by very narrow channels, and are mostly rocky islets, six only being of any considerable size or having importance. These are Bermuda or Main Island, Somerset, Ireland, St. George, St. David and Boas. Total area, 194 sq. m. They are difficult of access, being enclosed on three sides, N., W., and E., by formidable coral reefs, nearly all under water, and extending in some parts 10 miles from the islands, the only reefs of this description occurring in the whole central expanse of the Atlantic Ocean. There are several included lagoons or sounds (Harrington Sound, Castle Harbor, etc.), which are of shallow water, and in part largely grown with coral (especially the large brain-stones or meandrinæ). Few localities afford a better vista of the magnificence of coral growths than the Bermudas, the most luxurious development of which is to be seen at several points of the outer reef, as at Chubb's Cut and at the North Rock, small detached pinnacles lying in the sea about 9 miles N. of the main islands. The islands have little elevation, and in their general aspect much resemble the West India Islands; their highest point is 260 feet. The climate is delightful, an uninterrupted spring clothing the fields and trees with perpetual verdure. Severe thunder-storms, however, frequently occur; and when south winds prevail the atmosphere becomes charged with humidity. The mean temperature for the year is 70.4°; that of winter, 62.6°, and of summer, 80.4°. The highest range of the thermometer is about 86°. The physiognomic type of vegetation is the Bermuda cedar or juniper, which is relieved by cultivated growths of bamboo, palm, papaw, etc. The hedges of oleander and thickets of mangrove are characteristic features of the region. Almost every description of fruit and vegetable grows here abundantly; the arrow-root is said to be superior to that of any other place. Bananas are very extensively grown for home consumption. The islands are largely of wind-drift formation and consist of lime rock, with a disintegrated product of red earth. There are neither springs nor fresh-water streams in the Bermudas, and only a few wells, the water of which is brackish.

Principal exports are arrow-root, potatoes, tomatoes, and onions, which are shipped extensively to the United States. The largest harbor is that of St. George, a beautiful bay, capable of containing a large fleet, but of difficult ingress and egress on account of the narrowness of its entrance. It is strongly fortified. The Bermudas are an important naval station of the English fleet. The great floating dock is capable of lifting an iron-clad of 10,400 tons; it is 381 feet in length. The government consists of a governor, assisted by an executive council of 6 members (appointed by the crown), a legislative council, and legislative assembly. The legislative council is composed of 8 members and a president, nominated by the governor, but subject to confirmation by the crown; the house of assembly, of 36 members, returned by the tribes or parishes into which the islands are divided. An establishment for convicts has been placed on Boas Island. The capital is Hamilton, on Great Bermuda or Long Island. Pop. of the islands in 1871, 12,121; in 1881, 13,948; in 1891, 15,884; in 1901, 17,535, of whom 6383 were whites.

Bermudian, a post-village of Adams co., Pa., about 22 miles SSW. of Harrisburg.

Bern, or Berne (Fr. Berne, bérn; Ger. Bern, bérn), a canton of Switzerland, the most populous in the Confederation, and the largest in area excepting the Grisons, is bounded N. by France and Alsace, E. by the cantons of Soleure, Aargau, Lucerne, Unterwalden, and Uri, S. by Valais, and W. by Vaud, Fribourg, Neuchâtel, and France. Area, 2657 sq. m. The country is very mountainous, comprising, in the S., many of the most noted summits of the Alps, as the Finsteraarhorn, Jungfrau, Schreckhorn, Mönch, Eiger, and Wetterhorn, the terraces and contreforts of which form the Bernese Oberland, celebrated for the overpowering majesty of its mountains, with their resplendent fields of snow and ice; the beauty of its valleys, the chief of which are the Simmenthal, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, and Hasli; and the numerous waterfalls (Handeck, Reichenbach, Giessbach, Staubbach, Trümmelbach) and mountain torrents. Lakes Thun and Briens lie off the northern base of the Bernese Oberland. Among the most popular tourists' resorts of this region are Interlaken, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, and Mürren, which are now united to each other by ordinary and mountain (Wengernalp-Scheideck, Mürren) railroads. The NW. part of the canton is covered by the Jura Mountains, the two regions being separated by the valley of the Aar. The snows of the Alpine peaks feed immense glaciers. Nearly the whole territory belongs to the basin of the Rhine, and is drained by the Aar and its tributaries. The mountains are covered with forests of pine and beech, and the soil is fertile in the valleys. The chief agricultural products include wheat and other grains, potatoes, hemp, flax, and fruits. The rearing of cattle is a great source of wealth, the cattle of the Emmen and Saane being the best in Switzerland; and the cheese there produced is one of the chief articles of commerce. The chief manufacturing industries are match-making, the weaving of linen and other textiles, and wood-carving. About six-sevenths of the inhabitants speak German, and the great majority of the people are Protestants. Pop. in 1900, 589,433. Capital, Bern.

Bern, or Berne (L. Ber'na), capital of Switzerland and of the canton of the same name, mainly built on a small peninsula formed by the river Aar, here crossed by several bridges (the magnificent Kornhaus bridge, constructed in 1895-98, with its iron roadway 157 feet above the water), which connect the old town with its new quarter, 80 miles NE. of Geneva, and 23 miles S. of Basel. Elevation (of observatory), 1856 feet. It is one of the finest towns in Switzerland. The older portion is remarkable for the arcades formed by the houses in the principal streets. There are numerous fountains, many of which are ornamented with curious sculpture. Bern is famous for its panoramic views of the Alps, particularly those commanded by the Kleine Schanze and the Schännli. Among the prominent buildings are the cathedral (1421-1598), the old cantonal council hall, the old and new federal council halls, the museum of fine arts, and the museum of natural history. Bern has a university founded in 1834, the new buildings of which are in course of erection. The national library contains about 120,000 volumes, and the municipal library nearly as many. The manufactures include textiles, physical and mathematical instruments, machinery, and chocolate.

Bern owes its foundation to Berchtold, fifth Duke of Zähringen, who, in 1191, fortified the peninsula on which the town stands, and invited merchants and craftsmen to resort thither for protection. In 1218 it was raised to the rank of a free imperial city. In 1353 it became a member of the confederacy formed by the Forest Cantons. Its power increased rapidly, and in the sixteenth century the Bernese held sway over about one-third of Switzerland. Bern is said to derive its name from Bären, the plural of the German word Bär (a bear); and that animal figures on the armorial bearings of the town, as well as on the coins, sign-posts, fountains, and public buildings, while for many centuries living bears have been maintained at the public expense as part of the state property. As a matter of fact, its founder named it after the city of Verona, in mediæval times called Berna by the Germans, over which the house of Zähringen boasted titular sovereignty. Pop. in 1900, 63,994. Lat. (observatory) 46° 57' 8" N.; lon. 7° 26' 25" E.

It occupies a peninsula formed by the winding of the river. The neck of this peninsula is a towering eminence, rising 1200 feet above the sea and crowned by the old citadel. Since the war of 1870 the French government has fortified Besançon on an extraordinary scale. On every side the heights about the town bear forts and batteries so as to render the place impregnable. The town is well built. Among the prominent edifices are the mediæval cathedral and other interesting churches, the building of the prefecture, and the palace of Cardinal Granvella, who occupied the archiepiscopal see of Besançon. The town possesses university faculties of science and letters, an important astronomical and meteorological observatory, an artillery school, a library containing 130,000 printed volumes and nearly 2000 manuscripts, museums, and learned societies. Besançon is the centre of the great watch-manufacturing industry of eastern France. The other manufactures include agricultural implements, iron, steel and copper-ware, machinery, textiles, etc. The place was a Gallic stronghold in the time of Cæsar. There are interesting Roman antiquities, including a triumphal arch, erected by Marcus Aurelius. In the Middle Ages Besançon became a free imperial city of the German realm (Ger. name Bisanz). In 1648 it passed to Spain, from which power it was soon wrested by Louis XIV. Pop. in 1901, 48,178; of the commune, 55,322.

Bethlehem, bēth'le-hem (Hebrew, the "house of bread"), the modern Beit Lahm, a town of Palestine, memorable as the birthplace (according to Matthew, Luke, and John) of the founder of Christianity. It stands 5½ miles SW. of Jerusalem. It is a large, straggling village, with one broad street, at the extremity of which is the partially preserved Church of the Nativity, or Church of St. Mary, erected over the site (the "Grotto of the Nativity") traditionally celebrated as the birthplace of Christ. This architecturally beautiful and interesting ancient edifice is commonly attributed to the Empress Helena, the wife of Constantine. Attached to it are large convents, belonging to Roman Catholics, Greeks, and Armenians. All around are a multitude of chapels, erected as memorials of events commemorated in sacred history, and numerous reservoirs and springs to which sacred traditions are attached. On the W. side of the town are the remains of the ancient aqueduct which conveyed water to Jerusalem from several pools near Bethlehem. Bethlehem figures among the towns of Judah in the early period of Jewish history, and was noted as the birthplace of David. The population at present is estimated at about 8000.
